Mr. A. Lakshmayya, for the Petitioner.

Mr. M. Subramania Sarma, for the Respondent.

Wadsworth, J.—I agree with the conclusion and reasoning of the judgment which my learned brother is about to deliver. I only wish to add that after hearing a fuller argument and having the benefit of discussion with my learned brother, I am of opinion, that my decision in Kankarazu v. Achutaramanarazu (1), is erroneous.

Patanjali Sastri, J.—The question that falls to be decided in this revision petition is whether a debt for the repayment of which a decree has been passed after the commencement of the Mad. Agri. Relief Act, 1938, is liable to be scaled down in accordance with s. 8 of the Act when the debt is one incurred before October 1, 1932. The facts are simple and not in dispute. The respondent sued the petitioner in S. C. S. No. 4 of 1938 on the file of the Court below for recovery of the principal and interest due on a promissory note executed on October 29, 1929. The suit was brought on January 3, 1938 and the petitioner filed his written statement on January 30, 1938. Though the Act came into force when the suit was pending, the petitioner failed to put forward a claim to have the debt scaled down in accordance with the Act, and a decree was passed on April 18, 1938, for the full amount claimed by the respondent. Soon after the passing of the decree, however, the petitioner applied to the Court on April 29, 1938, to scale down the debt and the application was dismissed on the ground that there is no provision in the Act for scaling down a debt in respect of which a decree has been passed after the Act came into force. The petitioner has preferred this revision petition and contests the correctness of that view.

It is argued that the non obstante clause in s. 7 and the words "whether the debt or other obligation has ripened into a decree or not" in s. 8, indicate that all debts incurred before the commencement of the Act should be scaled down irrespective of any decrees passed in respect of them, whether such decrees were passed before or after the commencement of the Act. These provisions are not free from ambiguity and may, at first blush, appear to lend some countenance to the contention of the petitioner. But on a closer examination of these sections in the light of other provisions of the Act and the scheme revealed thereby, it is fairly clear that the reference to decrees is intended only to extend the benefit of scaling down to debts which had ripened into decrees before the Act came into force. The provisions appear to envisage the state of things on October 1, 1937 and the reference to contracts obviously relates to contracts made prior to that date. It is therefore reasonable to assume that the word 'decree' which occurs in the same context is also used subject to the same qualification. It is significant that the machinery provided in ss. 19 and 20 for 'amendment' of decrees by scaling them down in accordance with the Act, and for stay of execution pending proceedings for such amendment, are made applicable only to decrees passed before the commencement of the Act and there are no similar provisions in respect of decrees passed after the Act came into force.

Similarly, s. 18 provides for 'amendment' of decrees passed before the Act in suits instituted after October 1, 1937, by a proportionate reduction of costs also. These provisions which, in the case of decrees passed before the Act, expressly supersede the finality which attaches to decrees under the general law seem to indicate that, in the contemplation of the Legislature the relief which the Act provides for agriculturists should be claimed and obtained before decree, where such decree happens to be passed after the commencement of the Act, and that the principle of finality should operate unimpaired in such cases. Indeed, if the Legislature intended to exclude the operation of this principle in the case of all decrees against agriculturists whether passed before or after the commencement of the Act, the provisions of s. 19 and the latter part of s. 18, sub-s. (1) relating to 'amendment' of decrees passed before the commencement of the Act would be meaningless and otiose.

Nor is there any apparent reason to suppose that the Legislature intended to introduce into the Act such a startling departure from the basic principle of all judicial proceedings, namely, that all available pleas in answer to a claim should be made the subject of enquiry before the Court passes the decree. It is one thing to provide relief to agriculturists by way of scaling down their debts even when such debts had already ripened into decrees before such relief was thought of, but it is a different thing to declare that even if they failed to claim, when they could have claimed, such relief before a decree was passed, they should nevertheless be entitled to claim it at any time afterwards. It may be laudable to re-habilitate agriculturists by a compulsory scaling of their debts but it could be no part of this object to condone, and thereby encourage, their leaches in the conduct of legal proceedings. On the other hand, having regard to the expropriatory nature of the provisions, Courts should watch with a jealous eye attempts to have the scope of the Act extended, under colour of interpretation, beyond what its terms expressly warrant. I am therefore of opinion, reading the Act as a whole, that the word 'decree' in ss. 7, 8 and 9 must be taken to refer to decrees passed before the commencement of the Act.

The petitioner's learned Counsel placed reliance upon the decision of my learned brother Wadsworth, J., in Kankarazu v. Achutaramanarazu (1), as supporting his contention. The judgment is very brief and the question does not appear to have been fully argued and considered and my learned brother is now inclined, in the light of the fuller argument before us, to agree with the view expressed above. In Somasundaram Chettiar v. Peria Karuppan Chettiar (2), the suit was dismissed by the trial Court as barred by limitation but was decreed by this Court on appeal. An application for scaling down the debt was made to this Court before the decree was drafted and issued, along with another application to stop the drafting of the decree pending the disposal of the former application. This Court held that in those circumstances the judgment-debtor was entitled to have the debt scaled down. The broader question arising for decision in the present case was raised but the learned Judges observed that it was not necessary to deal with it on the facts before them. This decision therefore does not assist the petitioner. A decision of the Allahabad High Court in Abdul Noor v. Brijmohan Saran (3), was also brought to our notice but it relates to the construction of differently worded provisions in the U. P. Agri. Relief Act and has no bearing on the interpretation of the provisions of Mad. Act IV of 1938. This revision petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. XLI, rr. 23, 25, 27—Trial Court refusing to give opportunity to produce evidence—Evidence not sufficient for decision on point at issue—Remand by Appellate Court for obtaining evidence—Remand is under s. 151 and proper.

An Appellate Court's power of remand is not circumscribed within the rr. 23 and 25 of O. XLI of the Civil P. C. An order of remand under s. 151 would be a proper order, if it is made by the Appellate Court in a case in which the evidence on the record is not sufficient for a correct decision on the point at issue, to obtain further evidence before the trial Court which had refused to give an opportunity to produce that evidence. 167 Ind. Cas. 922 (3), followed, 44 Ind. Cas. 832 (1) and 92 Ind. Cas. 1055 (2), distinguished.

C. R. App. of the order of the District Judge of Gonda, dated August 30, 1939.

Mr. Mahabir Prasad Srivastava, for the Applicants.

Mr. L. S. Misra, for Opposite Party Nos. 1 to 9.

Order.—This is a revision application under s. 115 of the Civil P. C. against an order of the District Judge of Gonda remanding the case to the trial Court for recording the evidence of a witness and for a fresh finding upon the issues after taking into consideration the said evidence.

The suit out of which this present application arises was one for recovery of damages for malicious prosecution. Issues were framed in the case, and when the evidence of the plaintiffs was closed, the defendants applied for the adjournment of the case to enable them to examine one Pandit Badri Prasad as their witness. This application was rejected by the trial Court. The result was that the suit was partly decreed.

The defendant-opposite parties went in appeal to the District Judge of Gonda, and, in addition to challenging the decree of the trial Court on the merits, they objected in para. 7 of their grounds of appeal that the lower Court had erred in law in not allowing an opportunity for examining the appellant No. 3, Pandit Badri Prasad, as a witness in the case.

The learned District Judge was of opinion that the trial Court was not justified in refusing the application of the defendants-opposite party to examine Pandit Badri Prasad in the case. He consequently remanded the case to the trial Court for recording the evidence of Pandit Badri Prasad as the defendant's witness and for coming to fresh findings on the issues after taking that evidence into consideration. This order of remand was made conditional upon payment of Rs. 25 by the defendants to the plaintiffs. He ordered the appeal to be fixed before him on October 13, 1939, after the findings had been received from the trial Court.

It is against the order of remand that present revision application is directed. It has been contended on behalf of the plaintiffs-applicants that the order of remand was neither one under r. 23 nor r. 25 of O. XLI of the Civil P. C. but the case clearly fell within the purview of r. 27 of O. XLI of the Civil P. C. and in these circumstances the learned District Judge acted illegally in remanding the case to the trial Court for recording the evidence of the witness, whereas he should have recorded that evidence himself under the provisions of r. 27 of O. XLI of the Civil P. C. Reliance has been placed in this connection on two decisions, namely Saiyid Fida Abbas v. Rahim Bakhsh, (5 O. L. J. 139) (1) and V. Venkatarama Aiyer v. T. V. Sundaram Aiyar, (92 Ind. Cas. 1045) (2).

On behalf of the defendants-opposite parties it has been argued that the order of remand was not one under r. 27 of O. XLI of the Civil P. C. but was under the inherent powers of the Court. It has also been contended that the provisions of r. 27 of O. XLI of the Civil P. C. are no bar to the exercise by the Court of its inherent powers of remand. Rule 27 of O. XLI of the Civil P. C. opens with these words:—The parties to an appeal shall not be entitled to produce additional evidence, whether oral or documentary, in the Appellate Court. This shows clearly that the production of additional evidence, whether oral or documentary, is to be not before the trial Court but before the Appellate Court. The rule, however goes on to say:

But if:—

"(a) the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred has refused to admit evidence which ought to have been admitted, or

(b) the Appellate Court requires any document to be produced or any witness to be examined to enable it to pronounce judgment, or for any other substantial cause, the Appellate Court may allow such evidence or document to be produced, or witness to be examined."

There is no doubt that in either of the two cases which may arise before the Appellate Court, the latter will be entitled in its discretion to allow the production of evidence or document or the examination of a witness. Having regard to the circumstances of the case, it was no doubt open to the Appellate Court to have acted under r. 27 (1) (a) of O. XLI of the Civil P. C. and recorded the evidence of Pandit Badri Prasad itself and then given its own finding upon the issues in the case. Instead of acting under r. 27 (1) (a) the lower Appellate Court preferred to remand the case in its inherent powers for the examination of Pandit Badri Prasad by the trial Court and for obtaining its finding upon the issues in question after taking into consideration that evidence. In my opinion the course adopted by the lower Appellate Court was neither illegal nor unreasonable. Learned Counsel on behalf of the plaintiffs-applicants concedes that apart from the provisions of rr. 23 and 25 of O. XLI of the Civil P. C. an Appellate Court has ample jurisdiction to remand a case. The case of Hira Lal Bajpai v. Sri Ram Janki, (1937 O. W. N. 377) (3), may also be referred to in support of this view. There is no indication on the record to show that the defendants wanted to produce Pandit Badri Prasad before the lower Appellate Court. On the other hand, ground No. 7. of the memorandum of appeal states that the defendants' grievance was that the trial Court was not justified in refusing to give an opportunity to produce Pandit Badri Prasad and that the witness should have been examined by the trial Court. This being the state of facts before the lower Appellate Court, the question of examining Pandit Badri Prasad before the lower Appellate Court did not arise at all, and the only question which the lower Appellate Court was called upon to determine was whether the lower Court was justified in declining to give an opportunity to the defendants to produce the witness or not. The lower Appellate Court upon a consideration of the circumstances of the case came to the conclusion that the evidence of Pandit Badri Prasad should have been examined by the trial Court, and in this view of the matter the lower Appellate Court rightly remanded the case presumably under its inherent powers, for the examination of that witness. Under these circumstances no question of the applicability of r. 27 of O. XLI, arose, and the decision of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner in Saiyid Fida Abbas v. Rahim Bakhsh (5 O. L. J. 139) (1), has no application to the facts of the present case. There the lower Appellate Court had remanded the suit for rehearing ab initio under the provisions of O. XLI, r. 23 of the Civil P. C. Under the provisions of O. XLI, r. 23 in a case where the trial Court had refused to record certain evidence, which the lower Appellate Court considered ought to have been recorded by him. It was held that the provisions of O. XLI, r. 23 had no application to such a case though the lower Appellate Court could utilise the provisions of O. XLI, r. 27, in any manner which appeared proper. In the present case the order was not made under r. 23 of O. XLI, of the Civil P. C. under any mistaken apprehension of law, and having regard to the trend of the order, it seems to me that the lower Appellate Court acted under s. 151 of the Civil P. C. in directing the trial Court to record the evidence of Pandit Badri Prasad.

In V. Venkatarama Aiyar v. T. V. Sundaram Aiyar, (92 Ind. Cas. 1045) (2), the Subordinate Judge had remanded the case while he had directed the trial Court to re-try only Issues Nos. 5 and 6. All that the learned Judges of the Madras High Court laid down was that this order was without jurisdiction and that the proper course for the Subordinate Judge was to direct the trial Court to take further evidence he wished and submit it to his Court, whereupon he would record his own finding. In the present case there is only one principal issue, namely, whether the complaint of defendants was false, malicious and without any responsible and probable cause. The second issue merely relates to the quantum of damages. If the first issue is found in the affirmative, the second issue will necessarily arise for decision, but if the issue is found in the negative, the question of damages will not arise at all, although the Court will no doubt give a finding on both the issues.

In Hira Lal Bajpai v. Sri Ram Janki, (1937 O. W. N. 377) (3), it was observed that "it cannot be laid down that an Appellate Court has no power to remand a case to the trial Court unless the case falls strictly within the purview of r. 23 or r. 25 of O. XLI, Civil P. C. rr. 23 and 25 of O. XLI, Civil P. C. do not make provision to meet the contingency where the evidence on the record is not considered sufficient by the Appellate Court for a correct decision on the point in issue. Where, however, there is no reason to think that the parties did not get an opportunity of producing all the evidence that they desired to produce before the trial Judge, order of remand is not a very proper order."

This decision is an authority for two propositions firstly that an Appellate Court's power of remand is not circumscribed within the rr. 23 and 25 of O. XLI, of the Civil P. C. and secondly that an order of remand under s. 151 would be a proper order, if it is made by the Appellate Court in a case in which the evidence on the record is not sufficient for a correct decision on the point at issue, to obtain further evidence before the trial Court which had refused to give an opportunity to produce that evidence. The order of remand passed by the lower Appellate Court discloses no illegality which vitiates the said order and renders it liable to interference under s. 115 of the Civil P. C.

On the merits also the plaintiffs-applicants can have no legitimate ground for complaint. After Pandit Badri Prasad has been examined before the trial Court, the trial Court will be in a position to record its own findings after a consideration of that evidence and return those findings to the lower Appellate Court, which will have a right to examine those findings in the light of the fresh evidence. It seems to me clear that the order directing the trial Court to record the evidence of Pandit Badri Prasad instead of taking his evidence itself has caused no prejudice to the plaintiffs-applicants and in any event the order of remand was eminently just and reasonable upon the merits.

The application, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

GOVINDASWAMI PILLAI—RESPONDENT

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938)—Appellate Court's decree declaring liability for first time—No written application raising plea for relief under Act before Appellate Court—Proper procedure—S. 19—Applicability, to decree passed after Act.

When a liability is being declared in the Appellate Court's decree for the first time and a plea is open to the defendants under the Act there should be a written application raising this plea before the Appellate Court and on such application the Appellate Court should either give its own decision or reserve in its decree the right to have the matter decided by the Court below.

It is doubtful whether an order reserving a plea under the Mad. Agri. Relief Act for subsequent adjudication should be passed in the absence of an express prayer for the benefits of the Act. But the irregularity, if irregularity it be, should not deprive the defendants of their remedy when both parties have treated the order as binding upon them : 58 Ind. Cas. 806 (2), and 48 Ind. Cas. 611 (3), referred to.

Section 19, has no application to a decree passed after the Act came into force, Motam Kotayya v. Singampalli Venkata Punneyya (1), followed.

Messrs. A. V. Viswanatha Sastri and S' Amudachari, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. V. Srinivasa Aiyar, for the Respondent.

Order.—This revision petition raises the question of the proper procedure in a matter arising under Mad. Act IV of 1938. The present petitioner was a defendant in a suit which was dismissed on November 30, 1937, that is to say, before the Act came into force. There was an appeal by the plaintiff and the Appellate Court after Act IV of 1938 came into force reversed the decision of the lower Court and gave a decree. The last sentence of the judgment of the Appellate Court is as follows :

"This judgment will not preclude the defendants from applying to the lower Court for scaling down the debt under the provisions of Mad. Act IV of 1938 if they are entitled to have such relief."

It is common ground that no formal application under Mad. Act IV of 1938 was before the learned Judge when he disposed of the appeal. It is not clear whether any oral representation was made at the time of passing judgment that the defendants' rights under Act IV should be reserved. But it seems to me probable that something must have been said to cause the learned Judge to make this reservation in his judgment. After the pronouncement of this judgment a decree was drawn up which contains no provision for a reservation such as the judgment contains. Thereafter the present petitioner applied to the trial Court to scale down the Appellate Court's decree under s. 19 of Act IV. At the time when this application was made there was a good deal of difference of opinion on the question whether a decree passed after the Act came into force could be scaled down. That doubt has, I hope, been finally set at rest by our decision reported in Motam Kotayya v. Singampalli Venkata Punnayya (1). In the light of that decision, it must be held that the application to the lower Court to scale down the Appellate Court's decree under s. 19 was not the proper procedure. At the same time it does not seem equitable merely because the petitioner has adopted a wrong procedure and has not understood what is the right procedure to leave him without a remedy if a legal remedy is open to him.

Now it is doubtful whether the order of the Subordinate Judge reserving a plea under Act IV of 1938 for subsequent adjudication should have been passed in the absence of an express prayer for the benefits of the Act. Assuming, however, that the Judge had the intention or reserving a plea which was open to the defendants and which would have been taken in writing had the necessity therefor been made plain, the irregularity, if irregularity it be, should not deprive the defendants of their remedy when both parties have treated the order of the Subordinate Judge as binding upon them: vide Hriday Nath v. Ramachandra (2) and Tuljaram Rao v. Gopala Iyer (3). The Subordinate Judge having granted the defendants leave to raise in the trial Court the question of the relief to which they may be entitled under Act IV of 1938 this order binds both parties and cannot be treated as void merely by reason of an alleged irregularity. I would, however, observe that, though no procedure has been laid down in the Act, in a case of this kind when a liability is being declared in the Appellate Court's decree for the first time and a plea is open to the defendants under Mad. Act IV of 1938 there should be a written application raising this plea before the Appellate Court and on such application the Appellate Court should either give its own decision or reserve in its decree the right to have the matter decided by the Court.

On the facts of the present case it seems to me clear that the Court below could not proceed with the enquiry under Act IV of 1938 in the face of the Appellate Court's decree which makes no provision therefor. The proper procedure therefore appears to be for the petitioner to apply to the Appellate Court to have the decree brought in accordance with the judgment by embodying therein a direction to the trial Court to deal with the application for relief under Act IV of 1938 and amend the decree according to its decision. If and when the petitioner makes such an application to the Appellate Court it will of course be open to the respondent to urge any objections which may be available to him to the amendment of the decree. Should the Appellate Court carry out the desired amendment, the petitioner will then be at liberty to apply to the trial Court—not under s. 19 which really has no application to a decree passed after the Act came into force—but under ss. 8 and 9 as in a pending litigation, the matter having been reserved in the appeal for separate disposal. The revision petition against the order of the District Munsif must be dismissed, his order being correct on the frame of the petition, though he might perhaps have given to the petitioner some guidance as to the course which he should follow. In the circumstances, I make no order as to costs.

DAVIS, C. J. AND TYABJI, J.

—APPLICANT

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 99—Constable not having power to arrest trying to arrest person and meeting with resistance by third person—S. 99, if applies—Criminal trial—Revision—Error of law resulting in sentence of six months—Interference.

While the protection of s. 99, I. P. C., extends to acts that are not strictly justifiable by law, it does not extend to acts which are ultra vires and have no legal basis. The section applies indeed to a case where an official has done wrongly what he might have done rightly but not to cases where the act could not have been done rightly at all by the official concerned.

Consequently where a Police constable could not have rightly exercised the authority he did in arresting a person unless he had promoted himself to be an officer in charge of a Police Station or to the rank of a Sub-Inspector, there is no legal basis to his action and if the constable is met with resistance by third person s. 99 cannot protect his action.

Where there has been a clear error in law resulting in a sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment upon the applicant, the High Court should interfere in revision.

Cr. R. App. to revise the judgment of the Additional Sessions Judge, Sukkur, dated June 29, 1940.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Davis, C. J.—This is an application from jail by one Bhairo, son of Murid Jagirani, who has been sentenced for an offence under s. 323, I. P. C., to six months' rigorous imprisonment, and prays to this Court that either his sentence should be quashed or that it should be ordered to run concurrently with the sentence imposed upon him for an offence under s. 19-E, Arms Act. The two offences of which he has been convicted are part of the same transaction. We think that the conviction under s. 323, I. P. C., cannot be sustained, for the learned Additional Sessions Judge has not sufficiently considered the provisions of s. 99, I. P. C. He states that the appellant had no right of private defence against the Police constable Ghulam Hussain who had apparently acted in good faith under colour of his office in apprehending one Amil Jagirani, to whose assistance the appellant had gone and in whose defence simple hurt was caused to the Police constable Ghulam Hussain who, the learned Judge found, had without lawful authority arrested him.

It appears that while Head Constable Dodo Khan and the Police constable Ghulam Hussain and Police constable Hamidali were returning from the village of Jagirani where they had gone to investigate a case they heard a gunshot not far from the road. They went to investigate and found the appellant Bhairo, one Amil Jagirani and another person. Bhairo had a gun in his hand; Amil Jagirani was in the act of killing a partridge which it appeared Bhairo had shot. Amil Jagirani, it is said, was absconding after committing an offence under the Criminal Tribes Act. Police constable Ghulam Hussain caught hold of him, while Dodo Khan and Police constable Hamidali went in pursuit of the appellant Bhairo and his other companion. In the meantime Amil Jagirani raised cries for help, and the appellant Bhairo returned and came to release Amil Jagirani from arrest at the hands of Ghulam Hussain, and he struck Ghulam Hussain with the butt of his gun and rescued Amil Jagirani who ran away; but the appellant was pursued and overtaken by Head Constable Dodo Khan and Police constable Hamidali.

The appellant was convicted of an offence under s. 19-E, Arms Act, and also of offences under ss. 225 and 332, I. P. C., and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment for the offence under s. 225, I. P. C., and 8 months' rigorous imprisonment for the offence under s. 332, I. P. C., and he appealed to the Sessions Court against these convictions and the learned Additional Sessions Judge set aside the conviction under s. 225, I. P. C., altered the conviction under s. 332, I. P. C., to one under s. 323, I. P. C., finding, we think rightly, that Ghulam Hussain had no right to arrest Amil Jagirani and therefore the appellant was entitled to free Amil Jagirani from the wrongful confinement in which a Police constable was holding him. The learned Judge came to this conclusion because s. 22(3), Criminal Tribes Act, only authorizes an officer in charge of a Police Station or a Police Officer not below the rank of a Sub-Inspector to arrest any person who is reasonably suspected of having committed an offence made punishable under the section. Ghulam Hussain, Police constable was not an officer in charge of a Police Station nor was he a Sub-Inspector of Police; he had therefore no jurisdiction at all to arrest Amil Jagirani. Therefore, when Ghulam Hussain arrested Amil Jagirani he was not acting in the exercise of a lawful authority. Resistance in which hurt was caused to him by the appellant was resistance to the exercise by him of an unlawful authority and was not an offence under s. 332, I. P. C., neither was an offence under s. 225, I. P. C., committed, for the resistance offered to the apprehension of Amil Jagirani by the appellant was not resistance to a lawful apprehension but to an unlawful apprehension.

Nevertheless while the learned Additional Sessions Judge held that the Police constable was not entitled to the protection of these two particular sections, he held he was entitled to the protection of s. 99, I. P. C., though the learned Judge has not referred to this section nor has he quoted it, stating merely that the Police constable was acting in good faith under colour of his office. But that statement does not correctly represent the section. The section contains at the end of its first paragraph certain significant words and they are these; ".....though that act may not be strictly justifiable by law." The inference from these words is that while the protection of the section extends to acts that are not strictly justifiable by law, it does not extend to acts which are ultra vires and have no legal basis. The section applies indeed to a case where an official has done wrongly what he might have done rightly but not to cases where the act could not have been done rightly at all by the official concerned.

In this case the Police constable Ghulam Hussain could not have rightly exercised the authority he did in arresting Amil Jagirani unless he had promoted himself to be an officer in charge of a Police Station or to the rank of a Sub-Inspector. There was therefore no legal basis to his action. We do not think therefore it can be said that his act was nothing more than an act not strictly justifiable by law within the meaning of s. 99, I. P. C. If for instance, Ghulam Hussain had been an officer in charge of a Police Station or had been a Sub-Inspector of Police and some mistake had occurred as to the offence under the Criminal Tribes Act which Amil Jagirani had committed, so that it could not fall within the provisions of s. 22, Criminal Tribes Act, it might be said that s. 99, I. P. C., applied, for a Police Officer in charge of a Police Station or a Sub-Inspector may arrest without warrant under the section for an offence made punishable under the section even though that offence is not a cognizable offence. But this Police constable had no power to arrest under that section at all. Whether an act does or does not fall within the provisions of s. 99,

I. P. C., is a question of fact to be decided in each case.

We think therefore that s. 99, I. P. C., does not apply to this case. We think therefore the appellant had a right of private defence on behalf of Amil Jagirani when he released him from what was an unlawful confinement or restraint, a confinement or restraint which had no basis in law at all, and as he did not cause more hurt than was necessary, we do not see how the conviction under s. 323, I. P. C., can be sustained. We appreciate the fact that we are dealing with this case in revision. But where there has been, as we think in this case, a clear error in law resulting in a sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment upon the applicant, we think we should interfere. We therefore allow this revision application from jail and set aside the conviction and sentence under s. 323, I. P. C. The applicant will then be left to serve his sentence under s. 19-E of the Arms Act.

Society—Acts of management within powers of society—Dispute between its individual members and those responsible for its management, if can be decided by Civil Court—Civil Court, when can assume jurisdiction—Association—Association maintained not merely by subscription of members but by donations is not club—Member, when can sue management, stated.

It is a well-established principle that, provided that the acts of the management are within the powers of the society itself, any dispute between individual members of the society and those responsible for its management must be decided by the machinery provided by the rules and not in a Court of law. It is only when an act is ultra vires the society that a member is entitled to come to a Civil Court and have the act of the management which is ultra vires declared to be void.

Where an Association is maintained not by mere subscriptions from its members but by donations; it is not a club. A member of an association cannot sue the management because it does some act of which he disapproves, provided of course that he is not personally damaged by expulsion or punishment or by loss to property of which he may be a joint owner.

S. A. against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Bezvada, in A. S. No. 36 of 1935.

Messrs. S. Parthasarathy and V. K. Thiruvengkatachari, for the Appellant.

Messrs. G. Lakhmanna and G. Chandra-sekhara Sastri, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs are five members of an Association called the Ram Mohan Roy Free Library and Reading Room Association, which was registered in 1914 under the Societies Registration Act XXI of 1860. Defendants Nos. 1 to 9 are the members of the managing committee of that Association and defendant No. 10 is a person who according to the findings of the lower Appellate Court, has given an unconditional gift of an upstairs room erected above the original premises of the Association. The managing committee has permitted defendant No. 10 to have embedded in three walls plates with the name "Kowtha Suryanarayana Rao Public Hall" engraved. The plaintiffs have brought this suit to restrain the defendants from affixing plates of cast letters of this description or any other letters either cast or written or of any kind except those bearing the words, Ram Mohan Roy.

It is argued not only that the managing committee acted ultra vires in permitting defendant No. 10 to place plates with this inscription on the walls of the upstairs room; but that the grant of such permission was ultra vires of the association itself. This last contention seems so ludicrous as not to need any argument to refute it. There is certainly nothing in the rules which prevents the association from naming any hall or room in any manner it pleases; and the giving of a particular name cannot be in contravention of any rules of the association relating to the aims and objects of the society. If, as defendant No. 10 alleged in his written statement, his gift had been subject to conditions, it might well be argued that those conditions were not in consonance with the objects of the association; but with that case of defendant No. 10 we are not concerned, in view of the findings of the lower Appellate Court that the gift was unconditional. It is a well-established principle that provided that the acts of the management are within the powers of the society itself, any dispute between individual members of the society and those responsible for its management must be decided by the machinery provided by the rules and not in a Court of law. If disgruntled members were allowed to air their domestic grievances in Court, orderly management of the affairs of societies and corporations would be impossible. If the society as a whole does not approve of the acts of its management, it has every power by summoning a general meeting and passing a resolution to correct and control the acts of the management. In the suit society the acts of the managing committee are subject to the control of the general committee of which every member of the society is a member. It is only when an act is ultra vires the society that a member is entitled to come to a Civil Court and have the act of the management which is ultra vires declared to be void.

The Courts below seem to have come to their conclusions on the assumption that this Ram Mohan Roy Free Library and Reading Room Association was a members' club; but it is clear that the Association is maintained not by mere subscriptions from its members but by donations; and it is therefore difficult to see how it can be a club. However, for the purposes of this appeal, it is immaterial whether the society is a club or not; for even a member of a club cannot sue the management because it does some act of which he disapproves, provided of course that he is not personally damaged by expulsion or punishment or by loss of property of which he may be a joint owner. The decisions of the Courts below are therefore, wrong; and the matter in dispute being one that should be decided by the Association itself, the suit has to be dismissed. In order that the gift of this room and the inscriptions on it should not cause further disharmony between the members of the Association, defendant No. 10 is willing to delete the word "public" from the inscriptions. He undertakes through his Advocate to do this within three months of this date. As defendant No. 10 has given this undertaking, this appeal is allowed and the suit dismissed. The plaintiffs will pay the costs of defendant No. 10 in this Court only. Leave refused.

Deed—Construction—Value of case law—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 100—Charge in India, whether same as charge in England—Interest in property, if should be created under Indian law—Deed held created charge.

In a matter turning on the construction of a document cases are not very helpful except to clear one's mind as to the essence of the transaction which the agreement is said to effect. [p. 762, col. 2.]

Charge in India cannot usefully be compared with a charge, legal or equitable, in England because in India such a charge is defined by statute. What is essential is that immovable property must be made a security for the payment of money in such a way that the transaction does not amount to a mortgage in the Indian law sense. In that sense a mortgage is a transfer of an interest in specific immovable property for the purpose of securing money. Of course if the transaction falls within s. 58 it is outside s. 100. So a charge is something other than a transfer of an interest in specific immovable property. It is not a question whether there is an expression of an intention to create an interest but whether on its true construction, the document makes immovable property security for the payment of money. [ibid.]

[Case-law discussed.]

One J by a document admitted liability. In respect of this liability he undertook to execute a charge bond over a specified share and rights in a village together with the sir land. He further undertook to get sanction for the transfer of sir and not to assign certain property until the above were carried out:

Held, that the only possible purpose of the last undertaking was to segregate the property so that it would be answerable in the hands of J should he fail to give the charge bond, and that made this property a security for the payment of money. Thus a charge was created by the deed. [p. 764, col. 2.]

S. A. from appellate decree of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Raipur, dated April 22, 1938.

Mr. M. R. Bobde with Mr. R. G. Rao, for the Appellants.

Rai Bahadur M. B. Kinkhede, and Rai Bahadur D. N. Choudhari, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal raises a question under s. 100, T. P. Act. It is concerned with the construction of Ex. P-1. Does that document, which was duly registered, create a charge?

Essentially by that document one J admits liability. In respect of that liability he undertakes to execute a charge bond over a specified share and rights in a village called Nawagaon together with the sir land.

Sir land being involved there can, under the law applicable in the Central Provinces, be no effective transfer without the sanction of a certain administrative officer.

Accordingly the next undertaking is that J will obtain the necessary sanction. That is followed by a promise to execute the above mentioned charge bond within a month of obtaining sanction. The charge bond is to be registered.

Then the agreement in question provides:—

"Unless (until) the writing and the registration have been effected with respect to mouza Nawagaon, sir land and houses according to the terms laid down above, I will not assign in any way to anybody, my decree obtained from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner (Nagpur) in Cases Nos. 16 and 34 of 1929 nor will I transfer any property whatsoever, which I have acquired from the said Court by virtue of the decree. And I will fully abide myself with the terms of the agreement. If I act in contravention of any term whatsoever, the said creditors will be at liberty to file a suit immediately against me in respect of their claim and recover their amount due, by attachment and sale of my entire property which I have described above. I will further stipulate in the charge bond that in case the entire claim of the creditors is not satisfied by attachment and sale of the property that will be laid down in the charge bond, they will be entitled to recover their remaining claim from my any other property, movable or immovable, which they may desire."

The sanction was never sought; the charge bond was never given. Does the above create a charge separate from the charge that was going to be created by the charge bond?

A large number of cases have been cited before us by each side but in a matter such as the present turning on the construction of a document, cases are not very helpful except to clear one's mind as to the essence of the transaction which the agreement is said to effect.

There is little doubt what a charge (when within s. 100 of the T. P. Act) is in India. It cannot usefully be compared with a charge, legal or equitable, in England because in India such a charge is defined by statute.

Section 100 of the T. P. Act provides that "Where immovable property of one person is by act of parties or operation of law made security for the payment of money to another, and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, the latter person is said to have a charge on the property."

What is essential is that immovable property must be made a security for the payment of money in such a way that the transaction does not amount to a mortgage in the Indian law sense. Now in that sense a mortgage is a transfer of an interest in specific immovable property for the purpose of securing (various things which include the payment of money). See s. 58, T. P. Act.

Of course if the transaction falls within s. 58 it is outside s. 100. So a charge is something other than a transfer of an interest in specific immovable property.

Khajah Solehman Quadir v. Salimulla Bahadur (1), gives an example of a charge. Settlement of Blackacre to certain uses with direction to pay out of income certain periodic and ascertained sums to X. No interest in Blackacre is transferred but Blackacre is, so to speak, segregated, so as to make it security for the payment to X of the indicated sums. Anybody buying Blackacre or an interest in Blackacre with knowledge of the charge would be bound by it. It will be seen that there the charge arises out of a transaction that belongs to the law of trusts rather than to conveyance or contract.

In Aditya Prasad v. Ram Ratan Lal (2) the Privy Council applying the provisions of the T. P. Act, as expressing the principle of equity, justice and good conscience to a transaction of 1881 expressed the following opinion at p. 368* :

"It appears to them clear.....that the parties intended that the original village should remain in the possession of the mortgagees until the second debt was paid off, and intended, therefore, that the property should be security for the debt."

Cases relating to debentures, at any rate where, as in Imperial Bank of India v. Bengal National Bank (3), they turn on circumstances quite outside the present case, are not helpful. So cases like Sundarlal v. Ramjilal (4), do not assist. The facts there are complicated but narrow down to this: If A has two villages X and Y and he keeps one (X) and hands one (Y) to B to enjoy on terms that B has the revenue and A pays the Govt. revenue, has B a charge over X in order to secure the payment of Govt. revenue to A on Y? The answer was, of course, no. It was pointed out that A's obligations to B were purely contractual:

".....there is not a word (in the award under consideration which resulted in the above arrangement) to suggest that (A) agreed to the creation of a 'charge' on his estate (X) or to hypothecate it for the revenue of (Y) granted to (B)."

Makbul Ali v. Ali Ahmad (5), which was relied on by the respondent for the proposition that no charge can be created by implication (the observations in Kuttiumma v. Madhava Menon (6), being relied on) is not a very clear case and is concerned with quite different facts from the present. It does not purport to decide that before one can hold that a document on its proper construction creates a charge it must be expressly stated that a charge is created. No one doubts that before there can be a charge so created the document must operate to make immovable property security for the payment of money. What we are concerned with in this case is whether this document on its true construction has that effect.

In Sivanna v. Venkatakrishna (7), the clause that was being construed was "until the said amount is paid (Blackacre) should not be dealt with by the 1st and 2nd defendants in any manner." That clause appeared in a compromise decree. The Court observed:

"The promise contained in the compromise not to alienate the property to third persons with (out) the payment of the plaintiffs' debt is only a covenant not to create any interest in it in favour of others. There is no expression of an intention to create an interest in the plaintiffs' favour."

It will be noted that if the transaction amounted to a transfer of an interest it would not be a charge but a mortgage. We, with respect, consider, therefore, that it is not a question whether there is an expression of an intention to create an interest but whether, on its true construction, the document makes immovable property security for the payment of money. The learned Judges in Sivanna v. Venkatakrishna (7) rely on Gunoo Singh v. Latafut Hussain (8), as deciding that a covenant not to alienate "was regarded as insufficient to create a charge". Their Lordships could hardly have referred to Gunoo Singh v. Latafut Hussain (8), which decides that such a covenant does not amount to a mortgage.

Nevertheless in Rangampudi v. Venkateswarin (9), a decision to which one of us (Stone, C. J.) was a party, Sivanna v. Venkatakrishna (7), was cited with approval. Rangampudi v. Venkateswarin (9), is distinguishable from the present case. It was concerned with registration. There were also questions about admitting further evidence. The evidence sought to be introduced was a letter addressed to a bank by the defendant's father undertaking not to alienate certain properties. At the date of the letter there was no money payable to the bank which commenced its advances some time later. It was held that the letter did not amount to a charge, and following Imperial Bank of India v. Bengal National Bank (10), on appeal to Privy Council Imperial Bank of India v. Bengal National Bank (3), that effectively to create a charge it would have to be registered. It was also observed: "We agree with the decision in Sivanna v. Venkatakrishna (7)."

Sivanna v. Venkatakrishna (7), was dissented from in Narain Das v. Murlidhar (11) which follows Jawahir Lal v. Indomati (12).

As in Imperial Bank of India v. Bengal National Bank (10) so in Narain Das v. Murlidhar (11), it was stressed that the law does not prescribe any particular form of words as necessary to create a charge. The determination of the question in all such cases rests upon the intention to make the particular property a security for the payment of money.

We do not find that the other cases cited before us are very helpful. The learned Judge has referred to Madho Misser v. Sidh Binaik Upadhyaya (13), (and the appellants have cited Murat Singh v. Pheku Singh (14), as being a case dissenting from Madho Misser v. Sidh Binaik Upadhyaya (13)). What Madho Misser v. Sidh Binaik Upadhyaya (13), decides is that the document to effect a charge must effect it at once and not in futuro. Assuming for the sake of argument that that is so (it is not very obvious why) no one doubts that if the part of this document under consideration creates a charge at all it creates it at once. The argument before the lower Court doubtless was that as J had agreed to give a charge bond and do this and that the charge did not operate at once. In our opinion the undertaking, which either does or does not amount to a charge, was an undertaking binding from the moment the document was executed.

Without going so far as to say that a mere bare undertaking not to alienate property necessarily creates a charge we are clearly of the opinion that this document creates a charge. It has been urged that this might be so had the passage above quoted (ended?) at "with the terms of the agreement." But it goes on to describe what is to happen if J fails to carry out his promises. That, it is urged, imposes the sanction and that is the only sanction. We do not think so. Anybody reading this document would know—

(14) 7 Pat. 584; 110 Ind. Cas. 526; A I R 1928 Pat. 587; 9 P L T 743.

(1) that J had undertaken to give a charge bond,

(2) that J had undertaken to get sanction for the transfer of sir,

(3) that J had undertaken not to assign certain property until the above were carried out.

In our opinion the only possible purpose of the last undertaking was to segregate this property so that it would be answerable in the hands of J should he fail to give the charge bond, and that we think makes this property a security for the payment of money.

The appeal is accordingly allowed with costs. The decree will incorporate the clauses of the trial Judge's decree together with a provision relating to the costs in the lower Appellate Court and here which will be the plaintiffs'.

It should be added that the Court raised a question of the appropriate stamp. By the Stamp Act, s. 2 (17) mortgage deed is so defined as probably to include a document creating a charge. This document is not so stamped. The document has, however, been admitted and no party has raised this point probably for that reason.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2—Execution of rent decrees—Judgment-debtors pleading adjustment—Alleged deed of adjustment appointing one of decree-holders as manager in respect of share of 11 annas judgment-debtors, to manage their property and to distribute surplus profits among decree-holders—Other decree-holders and judgment-debtors not parties to deed, held not bound by deed—Deed held not adjustment within meaning of O. XXI, r. 2—Fact that other decree-holders were paid portion of rents in accordance with terms of deed held did not make them parties to it—Landlord and tenant—Rent suit—Purchaser of share of mahal pending suit, whether personally liable for rent—Patni and darpadni already sold at superior landlord's instance—Personal liability of purchaser.

Two rent decrees were obtained by the same decree-holders against the same judgment-debtors. In execution proceedings objections were raised by some of the judgment-debtors on the ground that there was an arrangement under a registered deed between the decree-holders and the judgment-debtors which had the effect of an adjustment of the decree within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. C. By this instrument one of the decree-holders was appointed a manager of the interest of the 11 annas judgment-debtors and he was to manage the property on their behalf. This deed contained provisions as to how the property was to be managed and how after meeting the collection expenses, paying out commissions to the manager and the current rents due in respect of the tenure, the surplus that remained were to be distributed among decree-holders. To this document the other decree-holders as well as the remaining judgment-debtors were no parties :

Held, that the document was not a deed of adjustment of the decrees within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2. The decree-holders and the judgment-debtors who were not parties to it were not bound by it and the fact that the other decree-holders were paid some portion of the rents that subsequently fell due under the terms of the deed, did not make them parties to the deed, nor could they be presumed to have expressly or impliedly authorised the manager decree-holder to enter into any such agreement with the judgment-debtors on behalf of them all.

Held, further that the 11 annas judgment-debtors were entitled to credit to the extent of the amounts paid on their behalf under the arrangement embodied in the deed.

A purchaser of a share of a mahal pending the hearing of the rent suits is not personally liable for any amount of the rent ; and if the patni and the darpatni have already been sold at the instance of the superior landlord he cannot be made personally liable.

As. from the original order of the Sub-Judge, Birbhum, dated March 21, 1938.

Messrs. Jatindra Mohan Chowdhury and Amarendra Narayan Bagchi, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Chandra Sekhar Sen, Hari Prosanna Mukherji and Monohar Chatterjee, for the Respondents.

B. K. Mukherjea, J.—These two appeals arise out of certain proceedings in execution of two rent decrees which were obtained by the same decree-holders against the same judgment-debtors. The rent suits were instituted in the year 1929 and decrees were obtained by the appellants decree-holders for sums of Rs. 9,000 odd and Rs. 13,000 odd respectively. In the present execution proceedings objections were raised by some of the judgment-debtors and these objections were of a twofold character. In the first place it was contended that there was an arrangement between the decree-holders and the judgment-debtors which had the effect of an adjustment of the decree within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. C. In the second place it was argued that by reason of a compromise petition which was filed in this Court in connection with appeal from Original Decree No. 178 of 1931, the decretal dues were payable in six yearly instalments and consequently the decree-holders were not entitled to take out execution for the whole amount. The executing Court has given effect to both these contentions urged on behalf of the judgment-debtors and has dismissed the applications for execution. It is against these two orders that these appeals have been preferred.

On hearing the learned Advocates on both sides we are of the opinion that the decision of the Court below is wrong and cannot be sustained. So far as the first point is concerned, the case of the objecting judgment-debtors rests really upon a registered deed which is marked Ex. A in this case and which according to them embodies the terms of adjustment between the parties. The document has been read out to us by the learned Advocate appearing for the appellants. It purports to be a deed of appointment of a manager in respect of the share of the 11 anna judgment-debtor in the tenure in arrears. One Fakir Chandra Bagchi, who was one of the decree-holders and has since died, was, by this instrument appointed a manager of the interest of the 11 annas judgment-debtors and he was to manage the property on their behalf. There are detailed provisions in this deed of appointment as to how the property was to be managed and how after meeting the collection expenses, paying out commissions to the manager and the current rents due in respect of the tenure, the surplus that remained were to be distributed. To this document the other decree-holders as well as the remaining judgment-debtors were no parties. It is conceded on behalf of the respondents that the other judgment-debtors who were no parties to this instrument could not possibly be bound by it. But it is argued that so far as the other decree-holders are concerned they having taken benefit under this instrument were estopped from disputing its validity. As I have said above the document does not purport to be a deed of adjustment at all and says nothing from which we can infer that the decree was adjusted in any way within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. C. It may have contained certain arrangements between the parties as regards the payment of the decretal dues that were due under these two rent decrees, but from the simple fact that the other decree-holders were paid some portion of the rents that subsequently fell due we are unable to say that they became impliedly parties to the instrument and it could not be presumed that they expressly or impliedly authorized Fakir Chandra Bagchi to enter into any such agreement with the judgment-debtors on behalf of them.

all. That being the position we are of the opinion that Ex. A does not stand in the way of the decree-holders seeking to execute their decrees.

As regards the other ground it appears that there was an appeal taken to this Court by the judgment-debtors not against the actual decision in the rent suits, but against certain observations made by the trial Judge as regards the way in which rents are to be paid in future. There was a compromise petition put in in this Court and one of the terms of the compromise was that the amount payable under the rent decrees would be paid off in six yearly instalments. It was also stated that the terms relating to the payment of the instalments mentioned above would be embodied in a separate petition to be filed in the execution proceedings in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Suri. It is admitted on both sides that no such separate petition was filed before the executing Court and we do not know the terms according to which these instalments were to be paid. It appears from the records that this objection was taken in an earlier execution proceeding, but it was overruled by the executing Court. The decree-holders have mentioned this petition of compromise in their application for execution and have stated also that no instalment had been paid in accordance with the same. Under these circumstances we are of the opinion that there was no concluded agreement between the parties as regards the payment of the decretal dues by instalments and if as a matter of fact none of the instalments were paid by the judgment-debtors the decree-holders are at liberty to execute the decree. The learned Advocates who appear on behalf of the respondents also do not press this point.

The result therefore is that the appeals are allowed, the orders passed by the executing Court in both the miscellaneous proceedings are set aside and the cases are remitted to the executing Court in order that the decree-holders might be allowed to proceed with the execution of the decrees. It has been brought to our notice by Mr. Hari Prosanna Mukherjee who appears on behalf of the 11 annas judgment-debtors that the account books filed by Fakir Chandra Bagchi have actually been produced before the Court and on a proper investigation of these accounts it will be found that a considerable sum of money has been paid on their behalf. The executing Court will certainly go into these accounts and will give credit to the judgment-debtors for any sums that might have been paid on their behalf as disclosed by these accounts.

Respondent No. 9 Ka, Tarak Brahma Roy, is represented in this Court by Mr. Chandra Sekhar Sen. We are of the opinion that as he was a purchaser of an eight annas share of the mahal pending the hearing of the rent suits he is, not personally liable for any amount of the rent; and if the patni and the darpatni have already been sold at the instance of the superior landlord he cannot be made personally liable. The appeals are therefore allowed and the cases remitted to the Court below to be dealt with according to law. The appellants are entitled to their costs in these appeals—the hearing-fee being assessed at one gold mohur in each appeal.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Objection by wife claiming property attached in execution of decree against husband as her, by reason of sale-deed, allowed—Suit by creditor for cancellation of sale-deed as being executed with intent to defeat and delay creditors held one under s. 53—Court's permission under O. I, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), held essential for its competency—O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), held not incompatible with s. 53, Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882)—Issue as to competency of suit raised in trial Court—Plaintiff not trying to amend plaint by turning suit as one in representative capacity—Amendment held could not be allowed in appeal.

In execution an objection was raised by the wife of the judgment-debtor that the property attached belonged to her by reason of a sale-deed executed by her husband in her favour. The objection was allowed. The decree-holder thereupon instituted a suit under s. 53, T. P. Act for cancellation of the sale-deed on the ground that it was executed with intent to defeat and delay creditors. The defendant's objection that the suit was incompetent for want of permission of the Court under O. I, r. 8, Civil P. C., was put in issue and disallowed. In appeal by the defendant the plaintiff sought to amend the plaint and turn the suit into a representative one:

Held, that the suit fell within the purview of s. 53, T. P. Act and, therefore, for want of Court's permission under O. I, r. 8, Civil P. C., was incompetent and that the provisions of O. XXI, r. 63, were not incompatible with s. 53, T. P. Act.

[Case-law relied and referred to.]

Held, further that having gone to the trial on issue of competency of suit it was far too late for the plaintiff to ask for leave to amend. It would be opposed to principle and accepted authority to allow the amendment. The course which the plaintiff should have adopted when the question was raised was to apply to the Court for permission to sue on behalf of all creditors. [p. 769, col. 1.]

A against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Madura, in O. S. No. 31 of 1936.

Mr. K. V. Sreenivasa Iyer, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. Bhashyam and V. Minakshisundaram, for the Respondent.

Leach, C. J.—The appellant is the wife of respondent No. 2. In 1931 the respondent association obtained two money decrees against respondent No. 2 for an aggregate sum of Rs. 894. In 1934, in execution of these decrees, the association attached five houses in Madura as property belonging to the judgment-debtor. The appellant objected to the attachment and her objection was successful. The appellant claimed title to the houses and other properties under a deed of sale executed in her favour by her husband on September 16, 1932. As the result of the removal of the attachment the association filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Madura the suit out of which this appeal arises for a declaration that the deed of sale was executed in fraud of creditors "nominally and colourably." In the meantime respondent No. 2 had been adjudicated an insolvent and permission of the Official Receiver was sought and granted, for the institution of the suit. The association, however, did not apply for an order under the provisions of O. I, r. 8, Civil P. C., permitting it to sue on behalf of all the creditors and in spite of objection proceeded with the suit for its own benefit and not for the benefit of the creditors generally. The association based its claim for the relief on two grounds. In the first place it said that the transaction was a sham and in the second place that the transfer was a fraudulent transaction, entered into with a view to defeat and delay the creditors. The alleged consideration for the sale deed was a sum of Rs. 10,000. The Subordinate Judge held that the transaction was not a nominal one as the appellant had given consideration to the extent of Rs. 8,000, but he considered that the transaction constituted a fraud on the creditors as the properties were worth Rs. 18,000. In accordance with this finding he granted the association a declaration that the sale deed was invalid, being a fraud on the creditors, and directed that it be annulled. He also vacated the order passed in favour of the appellant in the execution proceedings, but allowed her to rank as a creditor of her husband to the extent of Rs. 8,000 which she had paid.

The appellant has persisted in her contention that the suit as framed did not lie and she disputes the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the transaction was a fraud on the creditors. If her first contention is sound, it will not be necessary for the Court to consider the merits of the case. The appellant says that it was incumbent upon the association to sue on behalf of itself and all the other creditors of respondent No. 2 and relies on the provisions of s. 53, T. P. Act. That section says that every transfer of immovable property made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor shall be voidable at the option of any creditor so defeated or delayed. By the T. P. (Amendment) Act, 1929, the following provision was added to the section :

"A suit instituted by a creditor (which term includes a decree-holder whether he has or has not applied for execution of his decree) to avoid a transfer on the ground that it has been made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor, shall be instituted on behalf of, or for the benefit of, all the creditors."

The appellant says that as this provision has not been complied with, the suit must fail. On the other hand, the association says that O. XXI, r. 63, Civil P. C., gives to a decree-holder whose attachment has been disallowed the right to have the question decided by suit and the rule must be read entirely independent of the provisions of s. 53, T. P. Act. The suit clearly falls within the purview of s. 53, T. P. Act. It is not a suit merely for a declaration that the transaction is a bogus one but a suit in which the association also seeks to have the transaction set aside on the footing that it is a fraud on the creditors. The association accepts this and does not challenge the finding of the Subordinate Judge that consideration passed from the wife to the husband to the extent of Rs. 8,000. As the suit admittedly falls within s. 53, it can only be maintained if the association has obtained the permission of the Court under O. I, r. 8, Civil P. C., to sue on behalf of all the creditors. The words "on behalf of, or for the benefit of, all the creditors" in s. 53, T. P. Act, are taken from O. I, r. 8, Civil P. C., which provides that where there are numerous persons having the same interest in one suit, one or more of them may, with the permission of the Court, sue or be sued or defend on behalf of or for the benefit of all persons interested. If a suit has to be brought in a representative capacity, it can only be maintained when it has been instituted in compliance with the provisions of this rule. This was laid down by the Privy Council in Kumarabelu Chettiar v. Ramaswami Aiyar (1).

Before s. 53, T. P. Act, was amended there was a conflict in India on the question whether a decree-holder who was compelled to file a suit as the result of a successful objection to the attachment was compelled to sue on behalf of himself and all the other creditors. This Court was of opinion that it was not necessary for him to sue in a representative capacity: see Pokker v. Parkum Chandrankandu (2) and Ramaswami Chettiar v. Mallappa Reddiar (3). The decision in the latter case was that of a Full Bench. The Calcutta and the Bombay High Courts were of the opinion that it was necessary for the plaintiff to sue in a representative capacity: see Hakim Lal v. Moorshahar Sahu (4). The decisions of this Court and that of the Calcutta High Court arose out of suits which followed unsuccessful proceedings in execution. The Bombay cases are Burjorji Dorabji Patel v. Dhunbai (5) and Ishwar Thimappa v. Devar Venkappa (6). These cases did not arise directly out of execution proceedings, but the Court indicated that a suit of the nature of the present one should be brought in a representative capacity. It seems to me that the amendment of s. 53, T. P. Act by the insertion of the provision that a suit instituted by a creditor shall be instituted on behalf of, or for the benefit of, all the creditors must have been intended to put an end to this controversy. The words in brackets "which term includes a decree-holder whether he has or has not applied for execution of his decree" which follow the word "creditor" in the section, in my opinion, makes this clear. If this is the case the association is clearly out of Court.

But even if the question had to be decided on the reading of s. 53, without taking into consideration what has gone before, it would still be difficult to accept the association's argument. As the suit admittedly is one of the nature contemplated by s. 53, T. P. Act, surely the provisions of that section must be applied, especially as there is nothing in the section incompatible with O. XXI, r. 63; Civil P. C. Section 53, does not take away from the disappointed decree-holder the right to sue. His right to sue is left unaffected. All the section says is that he must sue on behalf of all the creditors; not for himself alone, and this implies no hardship. If the suit is successful and the judgment-debtor has not become insolvent, he has still the right to attach the property. If the judgment-debtor has become insolvent, then the right to attach is gone entirely and the decree-holder can only look to the Insolvency Court for payment. The requirement of s. 53, saves the filing of unnecessary suits and saves the judgment-debtor from being harassed by other creditors. I hold that it was necessary for the association to sue in a representative capacity and that, not having done so the suit must fail. The same view of the law has been taken by the Calcutta High Court in Ekkari Ghose v. Sidheswar Ghose (7) and by the Rangoon High Court in Chidambaram Chettiar v. R. M. A. R. S. Firm (8), Maung Tun Thein v. Maung Sin (9) and Asgar Ali v. C. V. R. M. Firm (10).

Mr. Bhashyam has asked that the Association be allowed to amend the plaint and turn the suit into a representative one. In support of this application Mr. Bhashyam has pointed to the fact that before the suit was instituted, the association had obtained leave from the Official Receiver and the leave was conditional on the Association depositing in Court to the credit of the insolvent's estate any amount realized by him as the result of the suit. Mr. Bhashyam has also pointed out that the declaration asked for was a declaration that the disputed transaction was a fraud on the creditors. If the failure to sue in a representative capacity was the result of oversight, the Court might have been disposed in these circumstances to allow the amendment, but that is not the case. The appellant in her written statement raised this very question and an issue was framed on it. The Association preferred to contest the validity of the appellant's averment and succeeded in the argument before the Subordinate Judge. Having gone to the trial on this issue it is now far too late in the day for the Association to ask for leave to amend. It would be opposed to principle and accepted authority to allow the amendment. The course which the Association should have adopted when the question was raised was to apply to the Court for permission to sue on behalf of all the creditors. This the Association did not do and it has only itself to blame for the failure of the suit. The appeal will be allowed with costs in this Court and below.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 2 (17) (h), 80—Word "service" in s. 2 (17) (h)—Liquidator appointed by Registrar of Co-operative Societies, whether public servant—Madras Co-operative Societies Act (VI of 1932), s. 48—Liquidator appointed—Suit against society without leave of Registrar, if maintainable—Membership—Resignation of—When takes effect—Restoration to membership—Resigning member subsequently attending meeting, effect of—Co-operative Societies Act (II of 1912), s. 42 (2) (b) and (6)—Contribution payable by past member—Determination of, by liquidator—If can be questioned in Civil Court—Pleadings—Amendment—Arguments in appeal before High Court heard—Amendment of cause title of plaint cannot be allowed.

The word "service" must necessarily mean something more than being merely subject to the orders of Govt. or to control by Govt. A liquidator who is appointed by the Registrar of Co-operative Societies to liquidate a private Co-operative Society is not an officer in the service of the Govt. and therefore is not a public servant. Even if the liquidator is appointed by the Govt. it cannot be said that because the liquidator is given quasi-judicial powers, the duties which he performs must necessarily be regarded as being public duties. Nor can every person who is appointed by the Govt. to perform public duties be a public officer. 148 Ind. Cas. 714 (1), explained 182 Ind. Cas. 516 (2), not approved. [p. 771, col. 1.]

In view of the clear provisions of s. 48, Mad. Co-operative Societies Act, a suit against a Co-operative Credit Society instituted without the leave of the Registrar when a liquidator has been appointed must be dismissed.

The membership of a Co-operative Society of a person ceases immediately his letter of resignation reaches the Society. There is thus an immediate cessation of his membership, and there being no provision for withdrawal of any resignation in the Act or in the by-laws, he can become a member again only by complying with the provisions relating to membership. The mere fact that he refused to receive the copy of the resolution not accepting his resignation and that he attended a meeting of the Society some six or seven months later has no legal effect so far as this question is concerned in the sense that these subsequent circumstances could not possibly restore him to his membership or make him a member after he had ceased to be one. Finch v. Oake (4), Glossop v. Glossop (5), relied on. Kuppu Govinda Chetti v. Secretary Co-operative Central Bank Conjeevaram (7), 76 Ind. Cas. 813 (6) and Reg v. Corporation of Wigan (8), distinguished. [p. 773, col. 2.]

Where the liquidator passes an order determining the amount of contribution payable by a past member to the Co-operative Society, the order can be questioned in a Civil Court.

[Case-law referred to.]

It would be highly undesirable from every point of view to allow applications of the cause title of the plaint which are made after the whole case is argued and the parties have an opportunity of knowing or at least guessing with some degree of accuracy what is going to happen to their case. [p. 770, col. 1.]

As. and C. Misc. Ps. against the decrees of the District Court, Chingleput, in O. S. Nos. 1 and 12 of 1935, respectively.

Messrs. K. Bhashyam Ayyangar and T. R. Srinivasan, for the Appellant.

Messrs. C. S. Venkatachariar and D. Ramaswami Ayyangar, for the Respondent.

Pandrang Row, J.—These are appeals from the decree in two connected suits O. S. Nos. 1 and 12 of 1936, on the file of the District Court of Chingleput. The plaintiff was the same in both the suits and the defendant also was the same. The plaintiff is the appellant and the defendant, who is the respondent in these appeals, was described as the Uttukottai Co-operative Society by its liquidator. The suits were for a declaration that certain orders made in 1933 and 1932 by the liquidator of the Co-operative Credit Society in question determining the contribution payable by the plaintiff in the suits at Rs. 8,000 and Rs. 2,000 respectively were illegal and void and of no effect whatever as against the plaintiff. The suits were resisted on various grounds and they were tried together and disposed in one and the same judgment by the District Judge. It is an unfortunate feature that in this case judgment was pronounced by the Court below more than a year after case had been closed. On all the points except one, the findings of the Court below were in favour of the plaintiff. But the suits were dismissed, though without costs, on the sole ground that no notice had been given as required by s. 80, Civil P. C. In other words, it was only on the ground of want of notice that the suits were found to be not maintainable, and in other respects the findings were in favour of the plaintiff.

The only point therefore argued in these appeals in the first instance, so to say, on behalf of the appellant is that the finding of the lower Court on the question of notice is wrong. Section 80, Civil P. C., requires that unless notice is given at least two months before the suit, no suit can be instituted against the Crown or against any public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity. In this case no notice whatever was given, and the contention on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant is that no notice is required because the defendant in the suit is not a public officer as defined in the Civil P. C., vide s. 2 (17).

It has been contended that even assuming that the defendant in the suit is the liquidator and not the society, he cannot be regarded as a public officer within the meaning of the Civil P. C. In this connection perhaps it is desirable first to deal with two applications presented at a very late stage, namely, after the hearing of the appeal was over and just before judgment was to be delivered, one application in each appeal to amend the cause title so as to show the defendant as "the liquidator of the Society" instead of "the Society by its liquidator." It is enough to say as regards the oral application for permission to withdraw the suits, that it is now withdrawn, and there is no need to pass any other order on it except to dismiss it as it is withdrawn. As regards the first application for amendment of the cause title of the plaint, it would be highly undesirable from every point of view to allow applications of this kind which are made after the whole case is argued and the parties have an opportunity of knowing or at least guessing with some degree of accuracy what is going to happen to their case. It is not as if this objection to the maintainability of the suit in view of s. 48, Co-operative Societies Act, was not raised in the trial Court, and the application to amend the cause title should have been put in much earlier. There is really no explanation forthcoming for the delay in making the present application. We are therefore not prepared to allow that application and it is accordingly dismissed. We may add however that the application to amend is absolutely contrary to what is alleged in the grounds of appeal, where it is contended that the defendant in the suit was the Co-operative Society and not the liquidator and therefore the question of notice did not arise at all. In other words, the main ground on which the finding of the Court below, which is against the appellant, was attacked was that the Court below failed to notice that the defendant in the suit was the Co-operative Society and not the liquidator, and of course, it was nobody's case that the Co-operative Society is a public officer.

Apart from the fact that the suit is really directed against the Society who is represented by the liquidator because the Society has been ordered to be wound up and a liquidator has been appointed by the Registrar, the question remains whether even a liquidator appointed by the Registrar can be regarded as a public officer within the meaning of the Civil P. C. It is contended that he is a public officer because he is an officer in the service of the Crown. It is obvious however, that qua liquidator he is not an officer in the service of the Crown, and it is not the case of either side that the liquidator as such receives any pay from the Crown or receives any remuneration for his duties as liquidator. The liquidator in this case is the Deputy Registrar of Co-operative Societies who of course, in that capacity is a public officer. But that does not mean that when he is actually acting in the capacity of a liquidator of a Co-operative Society, he is an officer in the pay of the Crown or in the service of the Crown.

The only decision which has been relied upon by the Court below is the one reported in Yedha Society, Namar v. Prag Das Mahesri (1). Apart from the fact that in that decision it is merely stated without any discussion that a liquidator should no doubt be considered a public officer within the meaning of s. 2 (17), Civil P. C., the actual facts of the case show that it was not necessary in that case to give any notice to the liquidator because the suit was not brought against the liquidator, in respect of any action of his. In other words, the observation was an obiter dictum. Another case which has been cited to us is the one reported in Sangakheda Kalan Co-operative Bank, Hoshangabad v. Ayodhyaprasad Shiamlal (2), in which Pollock, J. refers to the earlier decision of the Nagpur Court as one in which it was assumed without discussion that a liquidator is a public officer as defined in s. 2 (17), Civil P. C. The reason given by Pollock, J. for holding that the liquidator is a public officer is that the liquidator was appointed by the Govt. and his duties are quasi-judicial. In other words, the proposition as put forward in the case is that as the liquidator is appointed by the Govt. and performs public duties, he is an officer in the services of the Govt. when acting as the liquidator and therefore a public officer as defined in the Civil P. C.

In the present case the liquidator is not appointed by the Govt. but by the Registrar of Co-operative Societies. Even otherwise, we find it difficult to accept the general proposition that because the liquidator is given quasi-judicial powers, the duties which he performs must necessarily be regarded as being public duties; Nor are we prepared to accept the proposition that every person who is appointed by the Govt. to perform public duties is a public officer. If that view were accepted, it would follow that even a member or chairman of a local body appointed by Govt. would be a public officer. The words "service" must necessarily mean something more than being merely subject to the orders of Govt. or to control by Govt. We are unable to accept the view that a liquidator who is appointed by the Registrar of Co-operative Societies to liquidate a private Co-operative Society is an officer in the service of the Govt.; and this is the only ground on which it has been sought on behalf of the respondent to support the finding of the Court below. We are therefore of opinion that the present suits cannot be rightly defeated on the plea that no notice was given as required by s. 80, Civil P. C. The decrees however of the Court below dismissing the suits have been supported on the ground that the findings on other points by the Court below in favour of the plaintiff-appellant are wrong. The main point is whether the suit is maintainable in view of the provisions of s. 48, Co-operative Societies Act, which runs as follows:

"Save in so far as is expressly provided in this Act, no Civil Court shall take cognizance of any matter connected with the winding up or dissolution of a society under this Act, and when a liquidator has been appointed no suit or other legal proceeding shall lie or be proceeded with against the society except by leave of the Registrar and subject to such terms as he may impose."

Considerable reliance is placed on behalf of the appellant on the Bench decision in Vaikunta Bhat v. Sarvothama Rao (3). That however, was a case which had to consider a similar provision in the Imperial Act, namely s. 42 (6) which runs as follows:

"Save in so far as is hereinbefore expressly provided no Civil Court shall have any jurisdiction in respect of any matter connected with the dissolution of a registered society under this Act."

In construing that provision, it was held by the learned Judges that the liquidator in the case before them acted without jurisdiction and that therefore the Civil Court's jurisdiction was not ousted by s. 42 (6), Co-operative Societies Act of 1912. That was a case which is otherwise on all fours with the present case, because there also the question arose whether a person who had once been a member of a Co-operative Society could be rightly made to pay a contribution by an order of the liquidator when he had not admitted his liability. In the case before them the contention was that the appellants had ceased to be members five years before the liquidation and it was held that it cannot be said that they had no right to ask the Civil Court to decide whether they were under any liability to contribute at all. That decision as well as the other decisions which have been mentioned to us were all of them with reference to the Act of 1912 and s. 42 (6) thereof. As will be seen from the words of the provisions of the law with which we have to deal, namely s. 48 of the Mad. Act VI of 1932, cl. (2) thereof is far more precise in its language than the provisions in the earlier Imperial Act. For, it says that when a liquidator has been appointed (as in this case) no suit or other legal proceeding shall lie or be proceeded with against the society except by leave of the Registrar. There was no provision of this kind in the earlier Imperial Act for a suit being filed with the leave of the Registrar against a society after a liquidator was appointed.

In this case it is admitted that the Registrar refused leave when leave was asked for, and we find it impossible to find any reason for ignoring the plain words of the provisions of law which are applicable to the present case and in particular cl. (2) of s. 48 of the Act which is as clear as possible. It says that no suit can be instituted against a society when a liquidator has been appointed except by leave of the Registrar. This provision appears to us to stand in the way of the present suits, and though this point was not prominently placed before us in the argument and was certainly not referred to in the Court below, we are not able to find any way out of the situation created by the new law. This finding, namely that the suits are not maintainable in view of the provisions of s. 48 of Mad. Act, VI of 1932, is sufficient to dispose of these appeals. Nevertheless, as the other point, namely the question of liability of the plaintiff-appellant has been argued at considerable length before us, it is perhaps desirable that we should briefly express our opinion thereon and all the more so because a special request has been made on behalf of the appellant that we should express our opinion on this point.

The point really is a simple one because the facts are practically undisputed. The plaintiff-appellant sent his resignation on June 4, 1930, to the Secretary of the Society and there is no doubt that resignation was received by the Society and a meeting was held in the next month to consider the resignation. A copy of the letter of resignation appears also to have been sent to the Co-operative Department. The Society in its resolution dated July 1, 1930 (vide Ex. 2) resolved that the resignation should not be accepted. A copy of the resolution was sent to the plaintiff-appellant by registered post, but he appears to have declined to receive it. There can be no doubt that he was aware of the contents or at least of the fact that his resignation had not been accepted. On January 24, 1931, at a general body meeting of the Co-operative Society the plaintiff was present as a member and took part in it for some time, though he later on was asked to go out by the Chairman who presided at the meeting. It is argued on behalf of the respondent that these facts show that the resignation did not take effect and that the plaintiff-appellant really continued to be a member in spite of the letter of resignation sent by him on June 4, 1930. This argument assumes first that unless a resignation is accepted, it does not take effect in a case of this kind, and secondly, that the subsequent conduct of the plaintiff-appellant amounts to a withdrawal of his letter of resignation. As regards the first assumption, it appears to be really without foundation. In the case of an office in a private body like a Co-operative Society the law does not require that resignation should be accepted by the Society or anyone else before it takes effect. The bye-laws of the Society are altogether silent as regards the mode in which a member ceases to be a member, and there is no reference to resignation in the Act or in the bye-laws. There are one or two references in the Act to the withdrawal of members from the Society, and it is not contended that there can be no withdrawal or cessation of membership by means of resignation of membership.

On the side of the plaintiff-appellant reliance has been placed on two English cases,

Finch v. Oake (4) and Glossop v. Glossop (5). Finch v. Oake (4), was a case which related to the membership of the Bermondsey and Totherhithe Licensed Victuallers and Beer Sellers' Trade Protection Association and though the member who had resigned wanted subsequently to withdraw his resignation, the Society declared that he had ceased to be a member by reason of the resignation and it was held that he had really ceased to be a member as soon as his letter of resignation had been received by the Committee of the Association. In that case also the rules of the Association contained nothing as to the right of members to retire, this matter being left to be governed by the ordinary principles of law. In those circumstances, it was held that he could withdraw from the Association at any moment of his own pleasure and without the consent of his fellow members or the Association and therefore that immediately the letter of resignation reached the Association, the member who sent in his letter of resignation ceased to be a member and he could again become a member only by following the rules regarding election of members framed by the Association and not by any withdrawal. In the latter case Glossop v. Glossop (5) it was a director of a limited company who resigned his office as managing director. On the very day on which the letter of resignation came up for consideration before the special meeting of the directors an attempt was made to withdraw the resignation. But the meeting resolved that the office of managing director had been vacated. In this case, however, the matter of resignation was provided for in two articles of the company, which provided that the office of managing director should be vacated on the happening of any of the contingencies mentioned therein, where by the office of director should be vacated. The provision regarding the latter subject was to this effect:

"The office of director shall be vacated (inter alia)—if by notice in writing to the company he resigns his office, provided that, the vacation of office shall not take effect unless the directors shall pass a resolution to the effect that he had vacated his office within six months from the happening of the event whereby such director had vacated his office."

In these circumstances, it was held that the managing director could not withdraw his resignation without the consent of the company and that he had vacated his office.

by his letter of resignation and that the resolution of the Board at the special meeting was effective and valid. On the side of the respondent, reliance has been placed on two decisions, namely, those in Sudarsana Rao v. Christian Pillai (6) and Kuppu Govinda Chetti v. Secretary Co-operative Central Bank, Conjeevaram (7). The latter case does not contain any discussion of the question but is important in view of the fact that it deals with the very letter of resignation with which we are concerned in this case, though the decision therein was in respect of the resignation of the office of the president of the Society, the petitioner being also the president of the Society and the letter of resignation being in respect of both his office as president as well as his membership.

We are not concerned in the present case with the office of president but only with the question of membership and therefore the decision in Kuppu Govinda Chetti v. Secretary Co-operative Central Bank, Conjeevaram (7) is not very helpful. The discussion of the point is contained in Sudarsana Rao v. Christian Pillai (6) where the same learned Judge, namely, Sir Vepa Ramesam, relies to a great extent on certain passages from the text books on elections. The case with which the learned Judge had to deal was one in which the question for decision was whether a certain person had ceased to be an Honorary Magistrate prior to a certain date on which he was elected as a member of a local body. In that case it was held that an Honorary Magistrate does not cease to hold his office by his resignation but only on the acceptance of his resignation. That decision is certainly supported by the extracts from the text books on elections which relate to public offices or offices in local bodies in England which cannot be ordinarily given up without either the consent of some authority or the payment of a fine for non-acceptance. That case was one similar to Reg. v. Corporation of Wigan (8) which was decided in the light of the statutory provision in s. 36 of the Municipal Corporation Act, 1882, which provided that a person elected to a corporate office may, at any time, by writing signed by him and delivered to the town clerk, resign the office, on payment of the fine provided for non-acceptance thereof. The reasoning which would apply to resignation of a public office of this kind cannot be applied to resignation of the membership of a society with which we have to deal in the present case. We are therefore inclined to the view that the membership of the plaintiff-appellant ceased immediately his letter of resignation reached the Society, that is to say, early in June 1930. There was thus an immediate cessation of his membership, and there being no provision for withdrawal of any resignation in the Act or in the bye-laws, he could become a member again only by complying with the provisions relating to membership. The mere fact that he refused to receive the copy of the resolution sent to him in July 1930 and that he attended a meeting of the Society some six or seven months later has no legal effect so far as this question is concerned in the sense that these subsequent circumstances could not possibly restore him to his membership or make him a member after he had ceased to be one. It follows from this that the plaintiff-appellant ceased to be a member more than two years prior to the orders complained of in the present suits and to the liquidation.

The only other point which perhaps deserves some reference is the question whether the liquidator acted within his jurisdiction in these circumstances. So far as this point is concerned the decision of the Bench in Vaikunta Bhat v. Sarvothama Rao (3) appears to us to hold the field and, being a case clearly in point, has to be followed unless it is declared not to lay down the law correctly. Reliance has also been placed on two decisions of the Lahore High Court which are to the same effect, namely Mukund Lal v. Malhotra Bank, Hafizabad (9) and Anjman Imdad Qarza Bahami Bafindgan Amritsar v. Mehr Din (10). In view of the fact that these decisions relate exactly to the present point, whereas the other cases, and in particular Secretary of State v. Mayyappa Chettiar (11) and cases of that description, deal with other enactments, it does not seem necessary for us to consider in detail the question whether the cases dealing with other enactments really affect the present question having regard to the decisions which deal with the exact point which arises in these cases. On these points we are inclined to decide in favour of the plaintiff-appellant.

Nevertheless his appeals must fail and the suits must stand dismissed because of the absence of leave from the Registrar for the institution of the suits which, in our opinion, is required by the provisions of s. 48, Madras Co-operative Societies Act, VI of 1932. Having regard to the circumstances of these cases, we think the just course to follow with regard to costs is to direct the parties to bear their own costs in this Court, the appeals being dismissed and the memorandum of cross-objections also.

Riparian rights—Proprietors of estate on partition stipulating to keep watercourse joint and agreeing not to interfere with supply channels—Either party can restrain other from erecting bund and causing interference without showing damage.

Under the partition of an estate it was stipulated that the mountains, watercourses and certain other properties should be kept joint and none of the parties should cause obstruction to the supply channels and water channels flowing as per mamool till that date to the tanks from one part of the estate to another:

Held, that the putting up of a bund interfering with the common watercourse by one party was an infraction of the right of the other party and the latter had every right to have it removed without showing any damage. Bickett v. Norris (1), Kanakayya v. Narasimhulu (2) and 90 Ind. Cas. 198 (3), relied on. [p. 777, col. 1.]

A. against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Bezwada, dated April 11, 1935.

Messrs. Ch. Raghava Rao, M. S. Ramachandra Rao and D. R. Krishna Rao, for the Appellant.

Messrs. B. Sitanama Rao and P. Sivarama Krishnayya, for the Respondents.

Venkataramana Rao, J.—The facts necessary for the disposal of this appeal lie in a narrow compass. The question in dispute is between two neighbouring proprietors in relation to a natural watercourse known as Durgadevi cheruvu which flows between the two estates of North Vinagadapa and the South Vinagadapa. The plaintiff is the owner of the estate of South Vinagadapa and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are the owners of North Vinagadapa. Both these estates formed part of one estate which belonged to two brothers who partitioned it in 1844 by a deed of partition dated August 29, 1844 (Ex. N). Under the said partition it was stipulated that the mountains, watercourses and certain other properties should be kept joint and none of them should cause obstruction to the supply channels and water channels flowing as per mamool till that date to the tanks from one part of the estate to another. The Durgadevi vagu rises in a forest in the north-east of both the estates and flows in a westerly direction and empties itself into the Durgadevi tank within the limits of Vinagadapa south. It is the case of the plaintiff that no portion of the Durgadevi vagu flows through the estate of North Vinagadapa. But it is the case of the defendants that a portion of the vagu flows through a donka which is common to both parties and that the said donka forms part of the boundary of both the estates. That the donka belongs in common to the proprietors of both the estates cannot be disputed. This was not controverted by the plaintiff or his witnesses. Issue No. 1 was raised on the basis of the joint ownership of the donka. It is also the defendants' case that the course of the vagu is in the form of a big curve marked as BCA in the plan Ex. C when it traverses the donka and not in a straight course.

It is the case of the plaintiff that the course of the vagu has always been straight falling within the limits of the plaintiff's estate and that no portion of it goes through the common donka. The necessary for the action has according to the plaintiff been occasioned by the demolition of a bund marked AB in Ex. C which is at the southern extremity of the donka by the defendants in July 1929 after it was repaired by the plaintiff. The plaintiff alleges that in 1925 there was a cyclone which caused an erosion in the Durgadevi vagu and diverted the water in a circular course in the vagu preventing the water reaching the Durgadevi tank and a bund was built in order to prevent such a diversion and the said bund existed from 1925 to July 1929 when the defendants demolished it. Certain criminal proceedings were started in consequence and the parties were ultimately referred to a regular suit. The defendants denied that there was any such bund erected in 1925, and alleged that the bund was newly erected in 1929 because the defendants constructed a channel called the Gopavaram vagu to lead water from Gopavaram tank which is in the extreme east of their estate to the Durgadevi vagu to increase the water supply of Durgadevi tank, that by reason of the bund having been erected water which was naturally flowing from the donka into the tank known as Rallacheruvu was interfered with and they suffered damages thereby.

The main question in controversy between the parties is whether Durgadevi vagu was flowing in a straight course or in a bent course through the common donka. The suit is in substance for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to put up a bund to the Durgadevi vagu at the portion marked AB and for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the plaintiff when he raises any such bund or when repairs are effected for the same. In fact all the issues relate solely to this question. A larger question as to the water of Durgadevi vagu flowing into the Rallacheruvu vagu was also raised in the pleadings. But no issues were framed in regard to that matter though some evidence was let in on this question also. The main question for decision is only as to the right of the plaintiff to put up a bund in the Durgadevi vagu as alleged by him. This is again dependent upon the question whether the vagu runs in a straight course or in a bent course. The plaintiff can only succeed if it runs only in a straight course. If the finding is that it goes in a bent course the plaintiff's suit fails. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the Durgadevi vagu was flowing in a bent course and not in a straight course at the disputed locality and that the vagu does not lie exclusively in the estate of the plaintiff. It is this finding which Mr. Raghava Rao attacks on behalf of the plaintiff. The evidence relating thereto has been elaborately discussed by the learned Subordinate Judge and in view of the fact that we are agreeing with his conclusion we think it unnecessary to deal with the evidence at length. We propose to refer only to a few salient features which render the plaintiff's case improbable.

There are five plans filed in this case. Exhibit A is a plan prepared by the All India Survey Authorities in 1924-25. Exhibit B is a plan prepared by Mr. Rangachari in the early stages of the case in March 1930. Exhibit C is a plan prepared by an expert Mr. Varadachariar, a few months thereafter in September 1930. Exhibit D is a plan of the suit locality prepared by P. W. No. 3 during the course of the criminal proceedings in August 1929 just before suit which was filed in November 1929. Exhibit R is a plan prepared by P. W. No. 8 in O. S. No. 271 of 1910, a suit which arose with reference to the extension of the bund of Rallacheruvu in consequence whereof the plaintiff who is the owner of a portion of the Vinagadapa estate complained that his lands were submerged. A careful study of these plans taken in conjunction with the evidence of the witnesses who prepared them supports the defendants' case. The survey plan Ex. A is important. It shows that the Durgadevi vagu takes a bent course towards the west touching Rallacheruvu vagu almost and then flows downward into the Durgadevi tank. Exhibit C is very clear that the donka and Durgadevi vagu are one and the same in one portion of it after the vagu passes the bend and that a portion of the bent course of the vagu lies in the defendants' estate beyond the donka on the north. In Ex. C-1 the Commissioner remarks that from the appearance of the course and the physical features, water must have flowed through this course for a number of years as this vagu also is well defined and appears to be old. There is one other fact which is relied upon to show in this connexion that a portion of the water of Durgadevi vagu in certain seasons would flow into the Rallacheruvu vagu over surplus weir which has been constructed, within the limits of the plaintiff's estate when there is surplus water on the Rallacheruvu and this could not be unless the water was flowing over in a bent course. This topographical feature is admitted by the plaintiff's own witnesses P. Ws. Nos. 3 and 8 and the Commissioner in Ex. C-1 remarks that if there was water more than 2 feet in the vagu it would flow to Rallacheruvu over the surplus weir between A and the bund of Rallacheruvu.

There is consistent testimony given by the defendants' witnesses that the water used to overflow to the Rallacheruvu vagu from the Durgadevi vagu. Considerable reliance was placed by Mr. Raghava Rao on the plan prepared by P. W. No. 8 in the former litigation and the statement by P. W. No. 8 in the deposition in the present case that he would have shown the bent course of the vagu in the plan prepared by him if such was the course of the vagu. But he had to admit that he noted in his plan only the relevant points that were necessary for the suit O. S. No. 271 of 1910 and omitted the points that were not relevant and that the length of the vagu was shown in the plan only to the extent that was necessary then, and that any curve in the vagu was not relevant to the suit. Therefore his evidence is not of much value on the questions in dispute. The oral evidence of the plaintiff has been throughout to show that in 1925 there was an erosion which diverted the straight course of the vagu into a curved one at the disputed locality by reason of the breaches caused therein and that a bund consequently had to be put up by P. W. No. 1 at the instance of P. W. No. 4 who agreed to purchase the estate from the then owners of the zamindari. The learned Judge on a consideration of the evidence on this point was very clearly of the opinion that no such erosion took place and no such bund was erected.

It is the case of the plaintiff that P. W. No. 1 sent information to P. W. No. 4 about the breach in the vagu and thereupon P. W. No. 4 directed him to erect a bund. Two letters (Exs. H and J) are sought to be relied upon in support. The learned Judge declined to act on the said letters and rightly so. It is admitted by P. W. No. 4 and P. W. No. 1 that accounts were maintained in regard to the repairs and that P. W. No. 1 submitted the account of the repairs but no such account was produced. At the time when the repairs were executed P. W. No. 4 was not the owner but long after the repairs were executed the sale deed of the estate was executed in favour of P. W. No. 4 but no claim for repairs of this bund was made by him and the explanation given by him is unconvincing. That there could be no such erosion is also clear from Ex. T-1, the report sent by the Village Munsif on May 18, 1925, a day after the cyclone. He mentioned breaches in the Rallacheru vagu but did not mention that there was an erosion in the Durgadevi vagu. The evidence of other witnesses who speak with reference to this is unreliable. P. W. No. 2 was not in a position to say how long after the cyclone he went and saw the damaged portion. He says that after P. W. No. 1 strengthened the bund he saw it once and that he did not see it ever afterwards at any time, that at the time when the repairs were carried on, he did not see them. P. W. No. 3 also says that he had no opportunity to inspect when the vagu was flowing along its course. He was the engineer who prepared the plans for the Gopavaram vagu and he clearly says that he did not think of any bund erection at the point AB, when he made the scheme and he carried out the scheme, but it is significant that he was not consulted about the breach and how the bund should be erected and that he only saw it after it was built.

It is hardly likely that on such an important matter as the erection of the bund which is very material in connexion with the Gopavaram scheme he would not have been consulted at all if the fact of erosion were really true. Though P. W. No. 5 is a karnam for over 25 years he saw the suit vagu only once and he was the person who put the mark of the Village Munsif in Ex. T-1 and he did not see the vagu after erosion. P. Ws. Nos. 6 and 7 do not give any useful evidence except merely reiterating that the bund came into existence only in 1925. But all the witnesses clearly admit that if the bund was erected at the point AB water would not overflow into Rallacheruvu. P. W. No. 5 clearly says that if the bund at AB was in existence no water from the vagu can flow into Rallacheruvu even in high floods. But I think it is very plain even from the plaintiff's witnesses that water from the Durgadevi vagu used to overflow and go into Rallacheruvu vagu. As already stated the evidence of the defendants' witnesses was that to their knowledge there was the bent course for over 40 or 50 years and water was flowing through that bent course and during high floods or when the water reaches a certain height it used to overflow from the Durgadevi vagu to Rallacheruvu vagu. The learned Judge who heard the witnesses has believed them and Mr. Raghava Rao has not been able to point to anything to show that the opinion formed by the learned Judge of these witnesses is wrong. It is admitted by all the witnesses on behalf of the plaintiff that no such bund ever existed before 1925. From a consideration of the entire evidence we are of the opinion that the finding of the learned Judge that no such bund at AB existed, that the water did not run in a straight course but in a bent course as alleged by the defendants and that the bund was newly erected only in 1929 is correct. The question is whether the plaintiff is entitled to erect a bund. The donka being common property, its bed belongs to both the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Mr. Sitarama Rao has contended that it is not open to the plaintiff to put up the bund and interfere with the enjoyment of the common property and that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have a right to prevent the putting up of the bund even though they are not able to show any damage or the likelihood of any damage. It seems to us that this contention is well founded. In Bickett v. Norris (1), Lord Westbury enunciated the principle at p. 62* thus :

"It is wise, therefore, to lay down the general rule, that, even though immediate damage cannot be described, even though the actual loss cannot be predicted, yet, if an obstruction be made to the current of the stream, that obstruction is one which constitutes an injury which the Courts will take notice of, as an encroachment which adjacent proprietors have a right to have removed. In this sense, the maxim has been applied by the law of Scotland that where you have an interest in preserving a certain state of things in common with others, and one of the persons who have that interest in common with you desires to alter it, you have a right to preserve the state of things unimpaired and unprejudiced in which you have that existing interest.

Applying this principle it was held in Kanakayya v. Naresimhulu (2), that one of the two tenants in common of a party wall could not raise the party wall with a view to building a superstructure on his own tenement without the consent of the other tenant though he might suffer no inconvenience therefrom. The principle laid down in Bickett v. Norris (1), has been approved by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Moung Bya v. Maung Kyi Nyo (3): vide the observations of Lord Atkinson at pp. 500 and 501†. Therefore, the putting up of a bund AB in this case is an infraction of the right of the defendants and the defendants have every right to have it removed without showing any damage. But in this case it is admitted by the plaintiff's witnesses themselves as already stated that the bund would prevent any water from overflowing the vagu and reaching the Rallacheruvu. The defendants have this right even under Ex. N which clearly provides that no obstruction should be caused to the water flowing as per mamool in the channels from one estate to another.

But there remains another question which was raised by Mr. Raghava Rao. He has asked for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the Durgadevi vagu. The defendants asserted a right to take water from the vagu through certain passages which according to Mr. Raghava Rao were newly dug after the institution of the suit as will appear from the several applications made by his client in the lower Court for the appointment of a Commissioner to inspect the locality and prepare a plan of the existing topographical features. Unfortunately, an issue was not raised relating thereto but there is no doubt, that the question whether any water would overflow from the Durgadevi vagu in its natural condition having regard to the situation of the vagu and the defendant's lands did arise and the evidence establishes that during the time of high flood or when water reaches a certain height in Durgadevi vagu it would overflow into Rallacheruvu vagu. In fact in the written statement the claim that was put forward by the defendants was that the water of the vagu has been flowing uninterruptedly into the Rallacheruvu vagu from time immemorial and the plaintiff had no legal right to impede the usual flow of the vagu. All that the defendants can claim in this case is that the plaintiff should not do anything which would prevent the overflow of the water in its natural state from the Durgadevi vagu into the Rallacheruvu vagu either during high floods or when the water reaches a particular level which would cause an overflow of the water. Once the water falls on the defendants' land, the defendants can take such steps as they may to conserve it. If the defendants have got any other right, it is open to them to take such appropriate proceedings as they may be advised to have: it declared and safeguarded and it cannot be gone into in this suit. In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Held, that it could not be said that the Police Officer who filed the challan of which cognizance was taken answered to the description required by s. 83, namely "an excise officer authorized by the Collector in this behalf." In the circumstances, the whole proceedings were void.

Messrs. S. C. Talukdar and Kiron Mohan Sarkar, for the Accused.

Mr. Hamidul Huq, for the Crown.

Order.—In these two cases the two accused have been convicted under s. 54 (b), Bengal Excise Act, 1909, for keeping a licensed premises open after hours. The proceedings arose out of searches by the Police during which no Excise Officer was present. The matters were reported to the Collector of Excise who wrote to the Deputy Commissioner of Police, North District, on November 24, 1939, saying that he sanctioned the prosecution of the two accused and that he authorized an officer of the Police department to investigate the cases and to submit a report to the Magistrate under s. 83 (b) of the said Act. The accused in each case have been fined Rs. 60. These rules have been issued on the ground that there has been no complaint or report by the Collector of Excise or any excise officer authorized by him as required by s. 83 (b), Excise Act, and that therefore the Police Magistrate who tried the cases had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offences and the entire proceedings are wholly ultra vires.

In my opinion the rules must be made absolute. It appears that the Magistrate took cognizance in each case on a challan submitted by the Inspector of Police, Belghatta Police Station. He never saw the letter of the Collector of Excise dated November 24, until this was exhibited in the proceedings in the following February. Even if by any stretch it could be contended that this letter amounted in itself to a complaint or report as described in s. 83 (b), Excise Act, it is quite certain that the trying Magistrate did not take cognizance on such complaint or report. It cannot be said that the Police Officer who filed the challan of which cognizance was taken answered to the description required by s. 83, namely "an Excise Officer authorized by the Collector in this behalf." In the circumstances I must hold that the whole proceedings in each of the cases are void. The convictions and sentences are therefore set aside. It will be open to the excise department to proceed properly according to law if they are so advised.

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX,

HARVEYS LTD., TUTICORIN—

RESPONDENTS

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 10.—Benefit received by company held represented profits—Fact that gain was not in money but shares, held immaterial—Original cost of asset is question of fact—Price mentioned therein, whether conclusive proof of original cost—Price seeming fictitious—Income-tax authorities, if can go behind contract and ascertain true value.

The assessee company entered into a ginning contract with the mills. It undertook to mill cotton for the mills for a period of ten years at a reduced rate and as a consideration the mill exchanged their 20,000 shares for the 1,000 shares of the company. The assessee company contended that the exchange shares and the benefit of the ginning contract must be regarded as one transaction and, entirely of a capital nature and since the mills had been allowed to treat it as being a transaction of a capital nature, the company must be allowed to treat it in the same way.

Held, that the arrangement by which a proportion of the shares of the mills was issued to the company in respect of the ginning contract was not a transaction of a capital nature and the benefit received by the company represented profits received in the year of payment. The difference between the values of the exchanged shares must be allocated to the ginning contract and as such was profit in the hands of the company assessable to the tax. The fact that the gain was not in money but in money's worth, viz., shares, was immaterial. Van Den Berghs Ltd. v. Clark (3), explained, *Howley v. Leach, C. J.—The assessee company is a private company having been incorporated in British India in May 1933. The capital is Rs. 5,00,000 divided into 5,000 shares of Rs. 100 each and all the shares have been issued. The share-holders and their holdings are as follows: (i) the firm of A. and F. Harvey, 3,998 shares; (ii) the Madura Mills Co. Ltd., 1,000 shares and the Comorin Investment and Trading Co. Ltd., two shares. For the sake of brevity I will refer to the assessee company as "the Company" to the firm of A. and F. Harvey as "the Firm" and to the Madura Mills Co. Ltd., as the "Madura Mills." The firm consists of three partners, namely, Mr. A. Harvey, Mr. J. C. Harvey and the Tuticorin Co. Ltd., the share-holders of which are mostly certain employees of the firm. Mr. A. Harvey and Mr. J. C. Harvey are brothers. The profits of the firm are divisible between the partners in the following proportions: Mr. A. Harvey: 63/128; Mr. J. C. Harvey: 63/128; and the Tuticorin Co. Ltd.: 2/128. The capital of the Comorin Investment and Trading Co. Ltd., is divided into 10,000 shares of which Mr. A. Harvey and Mr. J. C. Harvey hold between them 9,999 shares.

In April 1933, it was arranged that on incorporation the Company should purchase for Rs. 15,00,000 the assets of a cotton ginning business owned by Messrs. A. and J. C. Harvey as individuals and not as members of the firm. The assets consisted of lands, buildings, plant and machinery. Of the purchase consideration Rs. 4,71,383 was allocated to the lands and buildings, and Rs. 10,28,617 to the plant and machinery. For several years Messrs. A. and J. C. Harvey had ginned cotton for the Madura Mills. The rates charged for the years 1930, 1931 and 1932 averaged Rs. 12-8-0 per candy. Before the incorporation of the Company negotiations took place between Messrs. A. and J. C. Harvey and the Madura Mills for the conclusion of an arrangement under which the Madura Mills should allot 20,000 shares to the company and as consideration the company should allot to the Madura Mills 1,000 shares and enter into a contract under which the company should agree to gin cotton for the Madura Mills at a flat rate of Rs. 8 per candy for a period of ten years from April 1, 1933. An agreement was arrived at on this basis after the incorporation of the company and 1,000 of its shares were allotted to the Madura Mills on July 24, 1933. The formal contract with the Madura Mills was executed on August 26, 1933, and the allotment to the company of the 20,000 shares of the Madura Mills duly followed. The Company paid no cash for the assets which it had acquired from Messrs. A. and J. C. Harvey. Of the Rs. 15,00,000 stated to be the consideration, Rs. 5,00,000 was satisfied by the issue of shares and the balance of Rs. 10,00,000 by the issue of debentures. On June 2, 1933, the company passed the following resolution:

"Resolved unanimously that the sum of Rs. 10,00,000 be raised by the issue of two debentures for Rs. 5,00,000 each bearing interest at 7 per cent. per annum charged upon its undertaking and all its property whatsoever and wheresoever both present and future including its uncalled capital if any and goodwill in the form now submitted to the meeting and that in consideration of the Finchley Investments Limited, and the Kochadai Investments Limited, having each paid to the company the sum of Rs. 5,00,000 that the above mentioned two debentures be sealed and issued to the above companies."

The Finchley Investments Limited and the Kochadai Investments Limited are two private companies registered in Canada and controlled by Messrs. A. and J. C. Harvey through their wives. The Finchley Investments Limited has an authorized capital of $50,250, divided into 50 Class A Cumulative Preferred shares of $5 each, and 10,000 Class B shares of $5 each, of which all the Class A shares and 5,990 of the Class B shares have been issued. All the Class B shares are held by Mrs. A. Harvey. This company has taken authority to issue debentures to the value of $10,00,000 and has in fact issued $99,000, all of which are also held by Mrs. A. Harvey. The Kochadai Investments Limited has an authorized capital of $25,250 made up of 50 Class A Cumulative Preferred shares of $5 each and 5,000 Class B shares of $5 each, of which all the Class A shares and 1,990 of Class B shares have been issued. Mrs. J. C. Harvey is the holder of the 1990 Class B shares. This company has authority to issue debentures to the amount of $5,00,000. Of these debentures $1,99,000 have been issued and $6,000 of them have been redeemed. The outstanding debentures are all held by Mrs. J. C. Harvey. Of the debentures issued by the Finchley Investments Limited the amount of $169,000 was issued on October 17, 1933, and of those issued by the Kochadai Investments Limited a similar amount was issued on October 12, 1933.

On the passing of the resolution, which I have just quoted, two cheques for Rs. 5,00,000 each were drawn by the firm in favour of the company, but it was not intended that they should be presented for payment. In the course of explanations given on behalf of the company in answer to questions put by the income-tax authorities, it was stated that the two cheques were issued by the firm on behalf of the Canadian Companies in pursuance of an oral arrangement between Messrs. A and J. C. Harvey on the one side, and the agents of the Canadian Companies on the other with a view to avoiding costly cross-remittances. It was also stated that Mrs. J. C. Harveys had received Rs. 5,00,000 from the Kochadai Investments Limited and that Mrs. A Harveys had received an equal sum from the Finchley Investments Limited. It turned out that the payments to these ladies did not represent cash but merely the issue to them of debentures by the Canadian companies. Therefore the position was that instead of the vendors receiving Rs. 10,00,000 in cash the Canadian Companies which they controlled received debentures for this amount and the Canadian companies in turn issued their own debentures to the wives of the vendors. The fact that the vendors received by this roundabout way debentures in lieu of cash will not affect the legal position if the transaction is a genuine one, but the Income-tax authorities say that it is not. They contend that the issue of debentures represents an artificial transaction undertaken to give an appearance of reality to the inflation in the value of the assets acquired by the company and a scheme to defeat the payment of income-tax.

It is made abundantly clear by the Commissioner of Income-tax in the statement of the case that the Rs. 15,00,000 representing the purchase consideration is in fact a highly inflated figure. All the assets of the business had been purchased by Messrs. A and J. C. Harvey between the years 1897 and 1931 for about Rs. 10,50,000. The following statement shows the dates of construction or purchase of the various assets, their original cost, their written down value according to the accounts of the firm, and the values placed upon them at the time of the sale to the assessee:

It is not necessary to examine these figures in detail to show that Rs. 15,00,000 was out of all proportion to the real value of the assets. It will be sufficient if attention is drawn to the machinery statement. The press at Sattur was purchased in 1914 for Rs. 101,411-13-2 and 19 years later was sold for Rs. 2,06,250. The gins at Sattur were purchased between 1905 and 1915 for

Rs. 1,05,683-14-2 and were sold for Rs. 2,06,250. The press at Dindigul was acquired during the years 1928 and 1929 for Rs. 84,944-13-10, and was also sold for Rs. 2,06,250. The gins at the same place were purchased during these years for Rs. 60,892-10-11 and they were sold for Rs. 2,06,250. The total assets stood in the books of firm at Rs. 5,00,000 and notwithstanding that there must have been considerable depreciation they were passed on to the company at the figure of Rs. 15,00,000. It has not been suggested by the company that the value of the assets had increased owing to special circumstances. On the contrary, it had to be admitted to the income-tax authorities that the value of ginning factories had been seriously affected by the depression prevailing in the textile trade. Indication of the extent of depression may be gathered from the fact that a factory built by another company at Sattur at a cost of over Rs. 2,00,000 was acquired by the company in 1934 for Rs. 40,000.

The company was assessed by the Income-tax Officer, Tuticorin, for the year 1934-35 on a total income of Rs. 82,643. The previous year was the year ended March 31, 1934, and the assessment was completed on August 31, of that year. In arriving at the figure of Rs. 82,643, the Income-tax Officer allowed a deduction of Rs. 61,130 as interest on the debentures which were issued to the Canadian companies. The true nature of the transaction with those companies had not then been realized, but further investigations carried out by the Income-tax Officer led to the disclosure of the position which I have stated. It was also discovered that the company had not declared any dividend out of the profits of the year ended March 31, 1934 and that out of the total book profits amounting to Rs. 85,225 during the two years ended March 31, 1935 only Rs. 25,000 had been distributed by July 1935. The explanation given on behalf of the company was that the year 1933-34 was the first year of its working and that having regard to the world depression the directors had decided on the ground of prudence not to pay a dividend in respect of that year. Not being satisfied with this explanation and being of the opinion that the real object of not distributing profits was to enable Messrs. A and J. C. Harvey to avoid a large amount of super-tax, the Income-tax Officer asked the Assistant Commissioner to give his approval under s. 23-A (2), Income Tax Act, 1922 to an order being passed that the sum payable as income-tax by the company should not be determined and that the proportionate share of each member in the profits and gains should be included in the total income of the member for the purpose of assessment to tax. After giving the company an opportunity of being heard the Assistant Commissioner passed the order asked for by the Income-tax Officer. The Income-tax Officer then computed the income of the company for the year 1933-34 which had escaped assessment in 1934-35 at Rs. 7,11,316. This figure included the following major items:

- “(a) Rs. 48,149 ...depreciation allowed in excess of the original assessment.
- (b) Rs. 61 130 ...interest on debentures allowed in the original assessment.
- (c) Rs. 6,00,000 ...advance received on account of ginning charges”.

The Income-tax Officer regarded the transaction between the company and the Madura Mills as involving a payment on account of ginning charges of Rs. 6,00,000. This figure was arrived at after allowing the company to treat the allotment of 1,000 of its shares to the Madura Mills as a capital transaction. The market value of the 20,000 shares of the Madura Mills which the company acquired was Rs. 7,00,000. The 1,000 shares of the assessee which the Madura Mills received in exchange in consequence of the arrangement had no market value, but the Income-tax Officer took the nominal value of Rs. 1,00,000 to be their true value. The difference between Rs. 7,00,000 and the Rs. 1,00,000 represented the payment by the Madura Mills to the company on account of ginning charges for the period of ten years. The company appealed to the Assistant Commissioner against this new computation of income and objected to the inclusion of the three items (a), (b) and (c) in the total income. The Assistant Commissioner accepted the Income-tax Officer's computation and dismissed the appeal. The company then applied to the Commissioner of Income-tax for revision of the Assistant Commissioner's order under s. 33 and asked in the alternative that certain questions of law be referred to this Court under s. 66 (2). Messrs. A. and F. Harvey also appealed against the order passed under s. 23-A. That appeal is pending but the question of the validity of the order does not arise in the present proceedings. The Commissioner acceded to the request of the company for a reference and has asked the Court to decide the following questions:

“1. Whether the Income-tax authorities were justified in law in going behind the contract for the sale of the assets of the Harvey Brothers to the petitioner company for Rs. 15,00,000?”

2. If the answer to the above is in the affirmative, (a) whether there was any material before the Income-tax Authorities to justify their finding that the original cost of those assets to the petitioner Company was not Rs. 15,00,000 and (b) if there was such material was there any material for their finding that the cost of the assets was Rs. 5,00,000?

3. Whether there was any material before the Income-tax Authorities to justify their conclusion that the debenture loan of Rs. 1,00,000 was illusory and colourable and that the interest paid thereon is not therefore allowable as a deduction?

4. Whether the transaction of exchange of the Madura Mills shares with the shares of the petitioner Company is an isolated transaction and of a capital nature?

5. Whether on the facts of the case the difference if any between the values of exchanged shares could be said to be profit in the hands of the petitioner assessable to tax?

6. Whether the Income-tax Authorities were correct in adopting the market value in respect of the 20,000 Madura Mills shares allotted to the petitioners?

7. Whether there was any material before the Income-tax Authorities to justify their finding that the difference in value between the 20,000 shares of the Madura Mills Ltd. received by the petitioners and the 1,000 shares of their own Company allotted by the petitioners to the Madura Mills amounted to 6,00,000?”

Question No. 1.—By virtue of s. 10 (2) (vi), Income Tax Act, 1922, an assessee is entitled to an allowance on account of depreciation in respect of buildings, machinery or furniture which belong to him and are used for the purposes of his business. The Commissioner rightly observes that the original cost of any particular asset is entirely a question of fact and like any other question of fact depends upon the evidence produced to prove it. The mere production of documentary evidence showing that a contract has been made for purchasing assets at the certain price does not conclusively establish the correctness of a claim made by an assessee that for the purpose of s. 10 (2) (vi) the original cost is the amount shown in the document. I also agree with the statement of the Commissioner that where the circumstances show that an assessee has arranged to put an entirely fictitious price on his assets it is open to the Income-tax Authorities to refuse to accept that price and to ascertain what the true value is.

On behalf of the Company the learned Advocate General has contended that the Court cannot go behind the contract, and in support of this argument has quoted the decision of the House of Lords in Aron Salomon v. Salomon & Co. (1) but I fail to see what bearing that case has here. A leather merchant and a boot manufacturer sold his business to a limited company which had a nominal capital of 40,000 shares of 1½ each. Before the incorporation of the Company the vendor entered into a contract with the trustee of the future Company settling the terms upon which the transfer was to be made. One of the conditions was that part payment might be made to the vendor in debentures of the Company. The memorandum of association was signed by the vendor, his wife, a daughter and four sons all of whom subscribed for one share each. In part payment of the purchase consideration debentures were issued to the vendor to whom was allotted 20,000 shares which were paid for out of the purchase money. The total number of shares issued was 20,007 and with his 20,000 shares the vendor had complete control of the company. At the time of the sale the business was solvent, but bad times came and the company was forced to go into liquidation. The question was whether the vendor as the holder of the debentures was entitled to preference over the other creditors of the company. Overruling the Court of Appeal, the House of Lords held that it was not contrary to the true intent and meaning of the Companies Act, 1862, for a trader to sell his business to a limited liability company consisting of himself and the members of his family, the business then being solvent, all the terms of sale being known to and approved by the share-holders, and all the requirements of the Act being complied with. There had been no fraud upon the creditors or share-holders and the liquidator was not entitled to rescission of the contract of purchase.

In the present case the Court is not considering a situation analogous to the situation in Aron Salomon v. Salomon & Co. (1), and it is not considering the provisions of the Companies Act but the provisions of the Income Tax Act. To accept the argument of the learned Advocate-General would mean that where an assessee had placed a fictitious value on his assets he would be entitled to the statutory allowance for depreciation on the fictitious figure and consequently would escape payment of income-tax. Therefore, to accept the argument would be to go against the true intent and meaning of the Income Tax Act. As I hold that the income-tax authorities have the right to look behind the contract of sale it follows that my answer to the first question is in the affirmative.

Question No. 2.—I have shown the basis on which the company says that the figure of Rs. 15,00,000 is arrived at and I am of the opinion that there was material to justify the finding of the income-tax authorities that the original cost of the assets acquired was not Rs. 15,00,000. The purchase consideration was the allotment of shares of the face value of Rs. 5,00,000 and debentures of the nominal value of Rs. 10,00,000 but the shares and the debentures had no value beyond the value of the assets acquired. The company adduced no evidence of the value of the assets. It relied entirely on the figure stated in the contract of sale. In these circumstances the income-tax authorities took the true value to be the figure at which the assets stood in the books and as this was the only evidence before them I consider that they were justified in their conclusion, especially in view of the age of most of the assets. If the company had placed before the income-tax authorities evidence to show that the assets stood in the books of the firm at a lower figure than their true value the position would have been different. But it did not do so and the inference is that it was not in a position to show that the assets were of higher value. I would answer both parts of the second question in the affirmative.

Question No. 3.—I have already stated the facts relating to the debenture issue and I consider that these facts provide material amply sufficient to justify the conclusion that the debenture loan of Rs. 10,00,000 was illusory and colourable. It follows that in my opinion the interest paid on the debentures is not allowable as a deduction.

Questions Nos. 4, 5, 6 and 7.—These questions may be dealt with conveniently together. The learned Advocate-General has contended that the exchange of the shares of the Madura Mills for the shares of the company and the benefit of the ginning contract must be regarded as one transaction and entirely of a capital nature. He has also said that as the Madura Mills has been allowed to treat it as being a transaction of a capital nature the company must be allowed to treat it in the same way. I am unable to accept either of these propositions. The main part of the consideration which the Madura Mills received for its Rs. 20,000 shares was the benefit to be derived from the ginning contract. For ten years the company has to mill cotton for the Madura Mills at a price far below the market price. I consider that the income-tax authorities were justified in regarding the transaction of a capital nature only to the extent of Rs. 1,00,000, represented by the shares of the company allotted to the Madura Mills.

The company in return for an immediate gain of Rs. 6,00,000 agreed to reduce its probable annual gains over a period of ten years. In other words instead of getting a probable income of Rs. 6,00,000 spread over ten years it obtained a lump sum payment in one year. Nor do I regard the fact that this gain was not in money but in money's worth, namely shares, makes any difference.

In my opinion the income tax authorities were also justified in taking the value of the 20,000 shares which the company received from the Madura Mills to be the market value at the date of the transaction. It has been argued by the learned Advocate-General that to place on the market at once a block of 20,000 shares would mean a depression in the price. As the Commissioner has remarked the shares were not put on the market and were not intended to be put on the market. In support of his argument that the answers to these four questions should be in favour of the company, the learned Advocate-General has quoted to us Howley v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue (2), Van Den Berghs Ltd. v. Clark (3), Short Brothers Ltd. v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue (4) and Commissioners of Income Tax v. Shaw Wallace (5), but I can find no support for him in these judgments.

In Howley v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue (2), the facts were these. In consideration of an advance of £7,000 made by the assessee to a company in 1905, he received debentures of the nominal value of £7,000 repayable after December 1914, by half yearly instalments of £500 and from a director 5,600 £1 ordinary shares of which he was to transfer 400 shares on receiving each payment of £500 in respect of the debentures. He was also to receive one-fifth of the profits each year upto December 1914, and thereafter a share of the profits corresponding in effect to the proportion of the debentures remaining unpaid from time to time. The assessee received no share of the profits for the year 1915, 1916 and 1917 until 1920 when he received a sum of £6,000 in settlement of what was due to him by way of profits for those years. In May 1921, he was paid £10,000 in full settlement of the liability under the agreement upto December 1921, the prospective date of its termination. The sums of £6,000 and £10,000 were assessed to super-tax for the years 1920-21 and 1921-22 respectively as forming part of his total income for the years 1919-20 and 1920-21. It was held that he was entitled under the original contract to have his share of the profits paid to him each year and that for the purpose of computing his income for super-tax the £6,000 and £10,000 must be spread over the years in respect of the profits of which they were paid, subject to the entire exclusion from liability to super-tax of such part of the sum of £10,000 as represented a composition of his right to receive a share of the profits of the year 1921. In the case now before us there was no arrangement by which the payment was to be spread over a period of years. The contract was one under which the company got an immediate gain in consideration of its reducing its charges. It must be regarded as a contract entered into in the ordinary course of its ginning business and nothing else. Van Den Berghs Ltd. v. Clark (3), was a decision of the House of Lords. The facts are even further away from the facts in the present case but an observation of Lord Macmillan has application here, not in favour of but against the argument of the learned Advocate-General. An English company carried on a large business in the manufacture of margarine, another substitute for butter. In 1908 the company entered into an agreement with a Dutch company of rival manufacture under which the two companies undertook to share profits and losses in the proportion which, on an average of five years, the profits of the rival trading in margarine bore to each other. In 1913 there was an extension of the agreement which was to be prolonged till the end of 1940. The two companies carried on their business separately until the end of 1913. During the last war the agreement could not be observed, but in 1920 a third agreement was entered into by which the former agreements were amended. One of the terms of the amended agreement was that the results of trading in the year 1914, and later years should be ascertained by accountants on each side and that any dispute arising under the agreements should be settled by arbitration. Disputes did arise and there was a submission to arbitration. The arbitration proceedings were however settled on terms by which the agreements were rescinded and the Dutch Company paid the English Company a sum of £4,50,000 as damages. The question was whether the £4,50,000 was in the nature of a capital asset or a receipt of income to be included in the profits of the English Company. It was held that the payment was in the nature of a capital asset. The passage in the judgment of Lord Macmillan which has bearing in the present case is this :

"Now what were the appellants (the English company) giving up? They gave up their whole rights under the agreements for 13 years ahead. These agreements are called in the stated case 'pooling agreements', but that is a very inadequate description of them, for they did much more than merely embody a system of pooling and sharing profits. If the appellants were merely receiving in the sum down the aggregate of profits which they would otherwise have received over a series of years the lump sum might be regarded as of the same nature as the ingredients of which it was composed."

Lord Macmillan's judgment was accepted by all the members of the House of Lords who heard the appeal and therefore we have here authoritative indication, that if a payment represents a lump sum payment of profits which would otherwise be received over a series of years it may be regarded as representing income. The decision in Short Brothers Ltd. v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue (4) was that the compensation paid in cancellation of certain contracts was chargeable to excess profits duty as a receipt of profits in the course of the company's ordinary trade, and must be included in the profits for the accounting period in which it became payable and was in fact paid. This case certainly does not help the company. Commissioner of Income Tax v. Shaw Wallace (5), was quoted because the Privy Council there said that the word "income" connotes a periodical monetary return coming in with some sort of regularity, or expected regularity, from definite sources. The source is not necessarily one which is expected to be continuously productive, but it must be one whose object is the production of a definite return, excluding anything in the nature of a mere windfall. It cannot be suggested that the allocation of the 20,000 shares of the Madura Mills was in the nature of a windfall. The contract fell within the scope of the memorandum of association of the company and it seems to me that the resulting benefit of the company must be classed as income.

A decision which is far more in point is that of Rowlatt, J., in Commissioner of Inland Revenue v. North Fleet Coal and Ballast Co. Ltd. (6). A Company owned a chalk quarry and contracted to supply a purchaser with a specified quantity of chalk yearly for ten years. The contract also included in its terms that the quarry company should build a wharf at which the purchaser's ships could load the chalk. As the result of the war of 1914 the agreement was suspended and after the war the purchaser did not wish to take further deliveries. It was then agreed between the quarry company and the purchaser that in consideration of a payment of £900 a year for the remaining four years of the term the purchaser should be relieved of his liability under the contract. Subsequently, the quarry company accepted a lump sum payment of £3,000 in lieu of the four annual payments of £900 and the £3,000 was applied by the quarry company in writing down the cost of the wharf. It was held that the £3,000 was chargeable to excess profits duty as a trading profit of the quarry company and therefore must be included in the profits of the year in which it was agreed to be paid. Rowlatt, J. refused to graft a distinction upon the decision of the Court of Appeal in Short Brothers Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (4). He considered that if a sum represented profits in a new form then that was income and income in the year in which it was received.

The answers which I would give to the four questions are these: No. 4: The arrangement by which a proportion of the shares of the Madura Mills was issued to the company in respect of the ginning contract is not a transaction of a capital nature and the benefit received by the Company represents profits received in the year of payment. No. 5. On the facts of the case the difference between the values of the exchanged shares must be allocated to the ginning contract and such is profit in the hands of the Company assessable to the tax. No. 6 The Income-tax authorities were right in adopting the market value in respect of the 20,000 shares of the Madura Mills allotted to the Company. No. 7. There was material before the Income-tax authorities to justify their finding that the difference between the 20,000 shares of the Madura Mills received by the Company and the 1,000 shares of the Company allotted to the Madura Mills amounted to Rs. 6,00,000.

The result is that the Income-tax authorities have succeeded on all the questions raised and therefore are entitled to their costs, which we fix at Rs. 250.

Minor—Marriage—Contract of, between minor girl and major person—Breach of promise—Minor, if can sue for compensation—Father's consent to contract, whether makes it valid.

Where a person who is major has entered into a contract of marriage with a minor girl, she cannot sue for compensation for breach of promise of marriage. The fact that her father consented to her making the contract does not make it any the more a valid contract although it might have made the marriage a valid marriage if it had taken place. 181 Ind. Cas. 755 (1) and 49 Ind. Cas. 59 (3) relied on. Purshomtamas Tribhovandas v. Purshomtamas Mangaldas (2), not approved.

Sp. S. A. against the decree of the District Court, Tharrawaddy in Civil Appeal No. 4 of 1940.

Mr. Sein Tun Aung, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. Heck, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff-appellant is a minor girl. She has sued the defendant-respondent U Tha Yin for compensation for breach of promise to marry. Her suit was allowed in the Township Court and a decree for Rs. 200 was granted. On appeal to the District Court, this decree was set aside and the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. The learned District Judge has pointed out that in Ma Pwa Kywe v. Maung Hmat Gyi (1), it was held that a minor was not competent to enter into a valid or binding contract to marry and the minor could not sue for damages for breach of promise of marriage. The plaintiff now appeals to this Court taking the ground that the minor appellant could sue for breach of promise to marry because the promise was made not only to herself but to her parents also. This is a strange form of argument and, in my opinion, it betokens great confusion of mind. No doubt, according to Burman Buddhist Law to constitute a valid marriage with a person under the age of 20 that person's parents must have given their consent. But we must distinguish between what is necessary for a valid marriage and what is necessary for a contract. It is the minor who is suing for breach of contract presumably because the contract was made with her. I fail to see how she could sue for breach of a contract which was made with her father, nor do I understand how the father could be sued or could sue on a breach of contract to marry his daughter.

The learned Counsel relied on Purshomtamas Tribhovandas v. Purshomtamas Mangaldas (2), which was a case where the plaintiff who had been betrothed to the defendant's daughter sued for a declaration that unless the defendant was willing that the marriage should be performed before a certain date the contract for the marriage should no longer be binding on the plaintiff and that the betrothal was void, and for Rs. 25,000 damages for breach of the contract of betrothal and marriage. It was expressly pointed out in that case that the marriage of Hindu children in a contract made by the parents and the children themselves exercise no volition; if this were true of the marriage, it was equally true of betrothal and there could be no implied condition that fulfilment of the contract must depend upon the willingness of the girl at the time of marriage. In Maung Po Thaw v. Maung Tha Hlaing (3), this decision was commented upon, and it was observed:

"It would be difficult to imagine circumstances more widely opposed to the conditions of marriage between Burmese Buddhists."

The consent of the parties is essential to a marriage and consequently the appellants it was held could not be made liable for damages for breach of the promise given by them. If they could not be liable for damages for breach of promise, neither could they sue. In the present case they have not sued. It is the minor who has sued. It is obvious that her suit must fail. The fact that her father consented to her making the contract does not make it any the more a valid contract although it might have made the marriage a valid marriage if it had taken place. The learned Counsel for the appellant asks that this case should not be decided here but be referred to a Bench for decision. It does not appear to me that there is any necessity for this course. The appeal is dismissed. In the circumstances of the case, however, I am not disposed to make any order as to costs.

Madras Court of Wards Act (I of 1902), s. 49—Suit by managers of temple—Notice under s. 49 giving name and address of temple and not those of managers—S. 49, if complied with.

A Hindu idol is founded upon the religious customs of the Hindus and is a 'juristic entity.' It has a juridical status with the power of suing and being sued. Although the managers are often described as trustees they are not trustees in law as the Devasthanam properties are not vested in them in trust. A notice, which complies with the requirements of s. 49, Mad. Court of Wards Act so far as the temples are concerned, cannot therefore be said to be open to objection for the reason that the names and addresses of the managers have not been stated if in the notice in question the names of the temples and also the village in which they are, are mentioned.

L. P. A. against the judgment and decree of Wadsworth, J. in S. A. No. 1076 of 1936 dated January 12, 1939.

Mr. S. V. Venugopalachari, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. E. Rajagopalachari, for the Respondents.

Krishnaswami Ayyangar, J.—This is an appeal under the Letters Patent from the judgment of Wadsworth, J., who confirmed on second appeal the decision of the District Judge, Ramnad, reversing the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Devakottah in O. S. No. 131 of 1929 on his file. The suit had been instituted by the trustees and hukhdars of three temples in the village of Naganathapuram, for a declaration that the boundaries fixed by the survey authorities between the village of Veeriyandal belonging to the temples, and the adjacent village of Senjai belonging to the Zamindar of Sivaganga were wrong and for the rectification of those boundaries in accordance with the true rights of the parties. At the time of the survey, and at the date of the suit the Sivaganga zamindari was under the management of the Court of Wards and the latter were accordingly joined as defendant No. 1 in the suit. The Court of Wards however dropped out of the litigation after the disposal of the suit in consequence of the zamindar having assumed possession of the estate. The zamindar stepped into their place in the lower Appellate Court and has since been contesting the claim of the plaintiffs. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit disallowing all the contentions raised by the Court of Wards. One of those contentions was that the suit was incompetent as the condition precedent to the institution of a suit against the Court of Wards, namely the issue of a proper notice under s. 49, Mad. Court of Wards Act, had not been fulfilled. A registered notice, Ex. M, in the case, had been given to the Court of Wards before suit, but it was attacked as being defective in material particulars and therefore invalid. Differing from the trial Court, the learned District Judge on appeal upheld that contention and accordingly dismissed the suit. A second appeal was preferred to this Court and it came on before Wadsworth, J. He concurred with the decision of the learned District Judge and dismissed the second appeal. Leave was however given by the learned Judge for preferring a Letters Patent appeal against his judgment and the appeal accordingly now comes before us. The notice in question is as follows :

"To,

1. The District Collector of Ramnad and Agent of the Court of Wards, Sivaganga estate, at Madera.

2. The Estate Collector, Court of Wards, Sivaganga Estate, Sivaganga.

Sir,

On behalf of the Devasthanams of Perumal Koil, Sivan Koil and Pillayar Koil, etc. in Naganathapuram and the trustee thereof, V. N. Venkatachalam Chettiar and others; I hereby give you notice under the provisions of the Court of Wards Act as follows:—

The notice then proceeds to set out the cause of action and the relief claimed. The only defect in the notice which is said to invalidate it is that it does not contain a proper description of the names of and the places of abode of the intending plaintiffs. In particular, it is said that whereas there are five plaintiffs who joined in instituting the suit, the name of one of them alone, namely, Venkatachalam Chettiar, is mentioned in the notice and the names of the others have been entirely omitted; nor has the address even of Venkatachalam Chettiar been given. It is clear that if the suit is to be regarded as a suit by the trustees, the notice must be held defective as the requirements of s. 49, have not been satisfied. In the light of the decision of the Privy Council in Bhagachand Dagadusa v. Secretary of State (1), full effect must be given to the language of the statute and it is not permissible to put a liberal construction upon that language or to say that it will be enough if there is a substantial compliance with the conditions of the section. The statute has laid down certain definite formalities to be observed as a preliminary to a suit against the Court of Wards, and we cannot whittle down the effect of s. 49, by adopting a liberal or beneficent interpretation. The appellants have however placed before us an argument which to our mind appears to have great force. They contend that the notice fully complied with the requirements of s. 49, inasmuch as the names and address of the Devasthanams which are the real plaintiffs are mentioned which, it is urged, is all that is required by the statute. In the case of such temples, it is now settled that the presiding deity is a juristic entity having itself the right to sue and be sued. In Pramatha Nath Mullick v. Pradyumna Kumar Mullick (2), Lord Shaw delivering the judgment of the Privy Council laid down the law on the point in these terms :

"A Hindu idol is, according to long established authority, founded upon the religious customs of the Hindus, and the recognition thereof by Courts of Law, a 'juristic entity'. It has a juridical status with the power of suing and being sued. Its interests are attended to by the person who has the deity in his charge and who is in law its manager with all the powers which would, in such circumstances, on analogy, be given to the manager of the estate of an infant heir. It is unnecessary to quote the authorities, for this doctrine, thus simply stated, is firmly established."

It follows that the real plaintiffs in the suit are the presiding deities of the Devasthanams mentioned. Although the managers are often described as trustees they are not trustees in law as the Devasthanam properties are not vested in them in trust. A notice, which complies with the requirements of s. 49, so far as the temples are concerned cannot therefore be said to be open to objection for the reason that the names and addresses of the managers have not been stated. In the notice in question the names of the temples are mentioned as also the village in which they are situate. This, in our opinion, is a sufficient compliance with s. 49, even on a strict construction.

It is true that in the cause-title to the plaint the names of the managers are mentioned as plaintiffs without reference to the temples or the presiding deities. In para. 3 of the plaint it is however stated that the plaintiffs are some of the trustees and hukhdars of the Devasthanam consisting of the Perumal Koil, Sivan Koil and Pillayar Koil etc., in Naganathapuram, Karaikudi. In (2) 52 C 809; 87 Ind. Cas. 305; A P R 1925 P C 139; 52 I A 245; 23 A L J 537; 49 M L J 30; (1925) M W N 431; 41 C L J 551; 2 O W N 557; 27 Bom. L R 1064; 22 L W 492; 30 C W N 25; 3 Pat. L R 315 (P C.) para. 4 the further statement occurs that the village of Veeriyandandal belongs to and is in the enjoyment of the said Devasthanam. Looking at the plaint as a whole it is absolutely clear that no personal rights of the plaintiffs were asserted in the suit. Although the names of the managers are mentioned as the plaintiffs and although they have been described in the plaint as trustees, it is clear in the eye of the law that they are merely the managers, the deities themselves being the true plaintiffs in fact. The proper form of a suit where a deity figures as party has been the subject-matter of consideration by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Jodi Rai v. Basdeo Prasad (3). The proposition was there laid down that inasmuch as an idol is a juristic person capable of holding property, a suit in respect of property in which an idol is interested is properly brought or defended in the name of the idol, although ex necessitate rei the proceedings in the suit must be carried on by some person who represents the idol, usually the manager of the temple in which the idol is installed.

Regarding the suit, as we must regard it, as a suit instituted by the presiding deities of the three temples, we must hold that a notice issued on behalf of the Devasthanams stating their names and the village in which they are situate is a proper notice within s. 49, Mad. Court and Wards Act. It follows that the appeal must be allowed and the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge restored except in regard to the portion of S. No. 3 in Veeriyandandal village claimed in the suit but not referred to in the notice. The respondents must pay the costs of the appellants both in this Court as well as in the District Court.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 54—Mortgagor entering into contract with third person to sell property before mortgaging it but sale completed after mortgage—Mortgagee, when entitled to precedence over purchaser.

An agreement of sale gives the purchaser an equitable title as owner in the property concerned. But, ordinarily, this is good only against the vendor himself, and does not operate against a person who obtains a legal interest in the same property in good faith without notice of the equitable title. Hence where the mortgagor enters into an agreement with a third person to sell property before mortgaging that property and the sale is completed after the mortgage, the mortgagee is entitled to precedence over the purchaser, if he had acted in good faith and had no notice of the agreement of sale.

S. A. from a decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated March 21, 1940.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. N. Aggarwal, for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—Only two points have been urged by Mr. Shamair Chand in this case. The suit was brought for recovery of rent said to be due from the defendant in respect of certain land which the defendant himself claims to be occupying as mortgagee. In respect of part of the land this defence has been upheld. Its validity, however, depends on whether the mortgage can have precedence over a sale of about the same time in favour of the person under whom the plaintiff claims. The mortgage took place on December 4, 1929. The sale is not shown to have been completed before October 24, 1930, but there was a preliminary agreement to sell on October 12, 1929, and Mr. Shamair Chand claims that this gives the sale precedence over the mortgage. An agreement of sale gives the purchaser an equitable title as owner in the property concerned. But ordinarily, this is good only against the vendor himself, and does not operate against a person who obtains a legal interest in the same property in good faith without notice of the equitable title. It is not suggested in this case that the mortgage did not create a legal interest or that the interest was not obtained in good faith, or that the mortgagee had notice of the agreement of sale. The other point relates to a question of calculation, which was not raised in the grounds of appeal. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

Madras City Tenants' Protection Act (III of 1922), ss. 11, 5—Notice under s. 11, if condition precedent to filing of suit—Notice, whether must be served to all joint tenants and their assignees—Defect of non-service, if cured by subsequently making them parties—Compensation—How, determined—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 18—Amendment for adding more defendants allowed but not embodied in plaint—Court after delivering judgment ordering its officers to carry out amendment—O. VI, r. 18 held sufficiently complied with.

It is clear from s. 11, City Tenants' Protection Act that the issue of the necessary notice is a condition precedent to the filing of the suit itself. Prima facie, when the section talks of notice to the tenant, it must include all the tenants if there are several tenants in respect of the same land. Hence all the joint tenants and their assignees must be served with a notice and a notice sent to one joint tenant only, is not sufficient to found suit for ejectment against all the tenants. Particularly in the case of the City Tenants' Protection Act there is greater reason to hold that the plaintiff must serve notice upon the persons who are entitled to the leasehold interest at the time when he seeks to eject. The defect of non-service cannot be cured by adding some of them as defendants later on. 120 Ind. Cas. 455 (2), 87 Ind. Cas. 708 (3) and 18 Ind. Cas. 632 (6), relied on, 179 Ind. Cas. 328 (4) and 122 Ind. Cas. 20 (5), distinguished, 48 Ind. Cas. 277 (1), explained and distinguished. [p. 790, col. 1; p. 792, col. 1.]

What has to be decided in determining under the City Tenants' Protection Act is the lowest value that prevailed within seven years before the date of the decree or of the order in ejectment. [p. 792, col. 2.]

An application for amendment of the plaint by adding some more defendants, made by the plaintiff was allowed. The amendment was not, however, embodied in the plaint till the date of the judgment. After delivering the judgment the Court ordered its officers to carry out the amendment:

Held, that the provisions of O. VI, r. 18, Civil P. C., were sufficiently complied with.

C. A. against the decree of the Principal City Civil Judge of City Civil Court, Madras, dated October 8, 1936.

Mr. R. Krishna Iyer, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. A. K. Shah, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 are the appellants in this appeal which is directed against the decree of the City Civil Judge in O. S. No. 728 of 1935. The suit was filed by the plaintiff to eject the defendants from the land and superstructure bearing Door No. 46, Fakir Sahib Second Lane, Triplicane. The suit was originally filed against defendant No. 1 only on the footing that she alone was the tenant of the suit property on a monthly rent of Rs. 2. The plaintiff averred that the tenancy was terminated by a notice dated March 9, 1935, in which the plaintiff offered compensation for the value of the superstructure under the provisions of the Mad. City Tenants' Protection Act. Defendant No. 1 filed a written statement pleading that she was not interested in the property in suit and that three other persons, who were later on added as defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4, were the persons entitled to the suit property as tenants. She stated that under a sale-deed dated June 10, 1912, she, her husband, the late Dawood Saheb, and her son Abdul Wahab had purchased the leasehold interest together with the superstructure from the previous tenant, that her husband's one third share now vested in defendant No. 4, that the one-third share belonging to herself was sold by her to defendant No. 3 Zulaika Bi by a deed dated December 4, 1934, and that the tenants who were really interested are defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4. After the statement was filed, an application was made to the City Civil Judge to implead the three persons mentioned by defendant No. 1 as party defendants to the suit. The lower Court granted this application by its order dated October 7, 1935, but it would appear that the amendment was not incorporated in the plaint until the date of the judgment. Nevertheless, summonses were taken to the newly added defendants and they pleaded among other things that they were not served with the requisite notice under the Mad. City Tenants' Protection Act, and that, therefore, the suit was not maintainable against them under s. 11 of the Act. They also stated that the plaint disclosed no cause of action against them and that in any event they were entitled to protection under the Mad. City Tenants' Protection Act, and that they were prepared to pay the value of the land and to buy the same and requested the Court to fix the value in accordance with the terms of the Act. Three issues were raised, (1) whether the suit was bad for want of proper notice to quit, (2) whether the suit was maintainable as framed and (3) what is the amount of compensation payable to the plaintiff in case the defendants desire to acquire the land.

On Issue No. (1) the lower Court held that the suit was not bad for want of proper notice. On Issue No. 2 it held that the suit was maintainable as framed and, on Issue No. 3 it fixed compensation originally at the rate of Rs. 1,800 per ground and varied the same on a review application made to it increasing it to Rs. 2,050 per ground. Defendants appeal to this Court. It is argued, on their behalf that the view of the lower Court on Issues Nos. 1 and 2 is wrong and that the finding of the Judge on Issue No. 3 is vitiated by a consideration of number of documents which are irrelevant and not really admissible for the purpose of determining the value of the suit land in accordance with the terms of the Act.

On the first question, the view expressed by the learned Judge is that when a tenant dies or assigns his interest, there is no need to give notices to all the heirs in the former case or to the assignee in the latter case. He finds that the plaintiff had no notice of the claim of the other defendants and that, therefore, he was entitled to proceed with his suit for ejectment after notice only to defendant No. 1. The question is, whether the notice given to defendant No. 1 alone is enough under the circumstances of this case. The leasehold interest in the land appears to have been originally held by one Mahomed Azeemuddin Sahib. He sold the site and the superstructure (he had only a leasehold interest in so far as the site is concerned) to three persons under Ex. 1 dated June 10, 1912. The vendees were (1) Dawood Saheb, (2) his wife Rahamat Bi Ammal and (3) his minor son Abdul Wahab Sahib. Rahamat Bi is defendant No. 1 in the suit and Abdul Wahab is defendant No. 2; he is now said to be a lunatic. By Ex. 2 dated January 21, 1915, Dawood Sahib gifted away his interest in the site and superstructure to Abdul Sukkur Sahib, his son by his senior wife, and to Fatima Bi, his daughter who is defendant No. 4. It is common ground that the right of Abdul Sukkur Sahib has vested in defendant No. 4. In 1934, defendant No. 1 conveyed her one-third share to defendant No. 3 by a registered deed.

From 1912, the date of Ex. 1, the rent due to the landlord seems to have been paid by the husband and wife, namely Dawood Sahib and Rahamat Bi and receipts were given in their names. Even after the death of Dawood Sahib which occurred in or about 1917 rent receipts were issued in the names of both Dawood Sahib and defendant No. 1. Exhibit 4 series which take us up to 1931 are all in the names of these two. It is said that even afterwards down to 1935 receipts were issued in the names of defendant No. 1 and Dawood Sahib, her deceased husband. Of defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4, defendant No. 2 is a lunatic; defendant No. 3 is a minor and defendant No. 4 is a major daughter. There is a dispute as to whether defendant No. 4 is married and is living with her husband or whether she is unmarried and is living with defendant

No. 1. It seems to me to be unnecessary to decide which version is true. In either case she cannot be represented by defendant No. 1. The question that arises for decision is whether notice was necessary to defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 under s. 11, City Tenants' Protection Act. It is clear from that section that the issue of the necessary notice is a condition precedent to the filing of the suit itself. Section 11 runs thus :

"No suits in ejectment or applications under s. 41, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, shall be instituted or presented against a tenant until the expiration of three months next after notice in writing has been given to him requiring him to surrender possession of the land and building, and offering to pay compensation for the building and trees, if any, and stating the amount thereof."

The prohibition contained in the section is against the institution itself. Under the analogous provisions of s. 28, cl. 2, Prov. Inso. Act, it has been held that leave of the Insolvency Court is a condition precedent to the filing of a suit by a creditor and that subsequent sanction cannot cure the initial defect. In this particular case, beyond adding them as parties later, it is not pretended that the requisite three months notice was given to them before they were sought to be impleaded as party defendants. Hence if they are entitled to notice it is clear that the suit must fail for want of requisite notice and the defect cannot be cured by their being added as defendants later on. So we go back to the question whether notice is necessary.

It is argued that the defendants are all joint tenants and that notice to one of them is enough. Prima facie, when the section talks of notice to the tenant, it must include all the tenants if there are several tenants in respect of the same land. The policy of the Act is to give the tenants a right to acquire the land itself at a proper value. It is obvious that while one joint tenant may not be in a position to acquire the land another might be in a position to do so and obviously the reason of the rule requires that notice should be given to all of them. The appellant relies upon the decision of the Judicial Committee reported in Harihar Banerjee v. Ramshashi Roy (1). There the Judicial Committee was concerned with the question whether there was proof of service of notice to quit upon all the joint tenants. There the notices were addressed to all the joint tenants and were actually sent to each and every one of the joint tenants. What was wanting was only proof that these notices reached the various addressees who were all joint tenants. Dealing with such a case the Judicial Committee held that proof of service of notice on one joint tenant would be prima facie evidence that the notice reached the other joint tenants. It is not an authority for the proposition contended for that no notice need be sent to all the joint tenants and that if a notice is sent only to one joint tenant it would be enough to found a suit for ejectment against all the tenants. This distinction is pointed out in two decisions of the Calcutta High Court. It is one thing to say that where notices were actually sent proof of service on one may be enough but it is another thing to say that no notice at all need be sent to each and every one of the joint tenants. In Bodardoja v. Ajijuddin (2) at p. 15, this distinction is pointed out. Referring to a prior decision of the Calcutta High Court, Bejoy Chand v. Kali Prasanna (3), the learned Judges state :

"On examination of the facts of that case however it appears that all that has been laid down in that case is that the notice, in order to give rise to this presumption, must be addressed to all the joint tenants and that, where the notice was addressed to one of the joint tenants, the mere service of the notice on the other joint tenants is not sufficient notice to quit according to law. In the present case the notices that were issued were addressed to all the joint tenants."

In the decision reported in Bejoy Chand v. Kali Prasanna (3), it was laid down, that in order to bind a joint tenant the notice to quit must be addressed to and served on him. They also held that the question whether service of notice on one joint tenant is sufficient service on the other joint tenants is a question of fact to be decided on the facts of each case having regard to the presumption laid down in Harihar Banerji v. Ramshashi Roy (1). The decision in Harihar Banerji v. Ramshashi Roy (1), was referred to in the judgment and it was pointed out that in the case that went up to the Privy Council the notices were addressed to all the joint tenants (*vide pp. 622 and 623). I therefore hold that as the notice served on defendant No. 1 was addressed only to her, it is not enough to sustain the present action. In the present case after the assignment under Ex. 1, Daudood Sahib, defendant No. 1, and defendant No. 2 all were tenants-in-common. It is not pretended that defendant No. 2 was given any notices at all. Defendant No. 1's husband's interest devolved by successive transactions on defendant No. 4, and defendant No. 1's right devolved upon the 3rd. The notice was addressed only to defendant No. 1, and was not addressed to any of the other defendants. Hence, this suit is not maintainable against defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4.

It is then argued that defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 were all living with defendant No. 1, that defendant No. 2, being a lunatic and defendant No. 3, a minor, notice could only be given to defendant No. 1, under whose protection they are living, and that even as regards defendant No. 4, on the footing that she is an unmarried girl living with defendant No. 1, notice to defendant No. 1 would be enough. Whatever the position may be as regards defendants Nos. 2 and 3, whether the omission to state that the notice is given to defendant No. 1 as also representing defendants Nos. 2 and 3, it is clear that so far as defendant No. 4, is concerned, since she is a major, notice to defendant No. 1, is not enough. Merely because she is living with defendant No. 1, her right to have a proper notice issued to her cannot be gainsaid.

It is then urged that an assignee of a lessee is not entitled to notice to quit under the general law. It is said that an assignment of a lease operates only as a sub-demise under the Indian law and that therefore notice is unnecessary. Reliance was placed on the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Ram Kinker v. Satyacharan (4), and Hunsraj v. Bejoy Lal Seal (5). Neither of these decisions lays down any such proposition. What is laid down is that a sub-demise of the whole of the unexpired term does not operate as an assignment of the lease under the Indian law though under the English Law the position would be otherwise. In the decision reported in Hunsraj v. Bejoy Lal Seal (5), the facts are these: The suit was brought to enforce forfeiture of a leasehold interest for an alleged breach of a covenant not to assign contained in the lease. The lessee executed a mortgage by way of a sub-lease for the whole of the unexpired term. It was contended that this amounted to a breach of the covenant against assignment and that the lessor was entitled to enforce the forfeiture.

The suit was to recover possession of the property on the ground of forfeiture. Sir John Wallis, delivering the judgment of the Board held that a sub-lease by a lessee for the unexpired residue of the term does not operate as an assignment of the lease. He pointed out that in this respect the Indian law differs from the English Law. The prohibition was only against an assignment and so it was held that there was no forfeiture.

In Ram Kinker v. Satyacharan (4), the lessee created a mortgage of his leasehold interest by way of sub-lease of the whole of unexpired term of the mortgage. This was done by means of what is known as an English mortgage as defined by s. 58, cl. (c), T. P. Act. The lessor filed a suit for rent impleading the mortgagees as well as the mortgagors and wanted a decree against both. The mortgagees resisted the suit by pleading that they had not taken possession of the property and that they were not liable for the suit claim. The question that had to be decided was whether the document by which the mortgagees claimed their right was an absolute assignment. If it was an absolute assignment the assignee would, by the doctrine of privity of estate, be liable to the lessors for rent even though the original lessee (if he happens to be the person who entered into contract of lease) may continue to be liable on his contract. The Judicial Committee pointed out that even though an English mortgage is in the form of absolute sale, still it is not an absolute assignment of the lease itself because the mortgagor has still a legal interest in the property mortgaged. They therefore held that the mortgagees were not the absolute legal owners of the leasehold interest and that therefore they were not liable to the lessor for rent. They referred to the earlier decision in Hunsraj v. Bejoy Lal Seal (5) and held that the principle of that decision governed the case before them. Neither of these decisions in an authority for the proposition contended for by the appellant that an assignment of a leasehold interest operates only as a sub-demise. A sub-demise of the whole of the unexpired portion may not amount to an assignment and will not be so under the Indian law, but that is not the question with which we are concerned.

It is then urged that the plaintiff had no notice at all of the original assignment by Dawood Sahib and that therefore the lessor was entitled to treat Dawood Sahib as his tenant. If so, the plaintiff is met with the difficulty, that Dawood Sahib died in the year 1917 or so, and the landlord seeking to eject, is bound to seek out the heirs and to serve the necessary notice on the person who at the time of the notice is actually entitled to the leasehold interest. If therefore, the plaintiff was not bound to give notice to the assignees of Dawood Sahib and was entitled to treat Dawood Sahib as his tenant in spite of his having assigned away the interest, then after Dawood Sahib's death the plaintiff did not give notice to his heirs who are defendants Nos. 1 to 4, defendant No. 1 being the widow and defendants Nos. 2 to 4 the children of Dawood Sahib. The view expressed by the lower Court that if the tenant happens to be a Muhammadan and he died, there would be a number of persons who would be entitled to fractional interests and that therefore the landlord is not bound to serve notices on all is begging the question. If the landlord is bound under the law to serve notices on the heirs it is no answer to say that there might be a number of heirs and that it would be difficult to find out and serve all of them.

Particularly in the case of the City Tenants Protection Act there is greater reason to hold that the plaintiff must serve notice upon the persons who are entitled to the leasehold interest at the time when he seeks to eject. As regards the right of an assignee of a lessee it was laid down in Kesavaswami Ayyar v. Narayanan Chetti (6) that the landlord was bound to implead the assignee or the heir-at-law in a proceeding which he takes either for recovery of the land or for sale of the holding. It is pointed out that without impleading the assignee or the heir-at-law the proceeding would not bind the assignee or the heir-at-law: see also Muthukaruppa Pillai v. Annamalai Chettiar (7). As regards the second issue whether the amendments not having been carried out in the original plaint the suit is bad against defendant Nos. 2 to 4, O. VI, r. 18, Civil P. C., has got to be considered. That Rule provides that where an amendment has to be carried out in the plaint within the time limited by the order or if no time is fixed within 14 days of the order unless the Court extends the time later on. In this case the plaintiff was absolutely indifferent and no amendments were actually embodied in the plaint.

(6) 24 M L J 228; 18 Ind. Cas. 632; 13 M L T 95; (1913) M W N 93.

(7) 69 M L J 297; 157 Ind. Cas. 896; A I R 1935 Mad. 785; (1935) M W N 884; 8 R M 173; 42 L W 585.

But my attention is drawn to an application made on the date of the trial, that is October 2, 1936, on which date the plaintiff applied by C. M. P. No. 2534 of 1936, for extension of time to carry out the amendment in the plaint. It does not appear whether notice of this application was given to the other side but an order was passed on that date that orders will be passed along with the judgment and when the judgment was delivered on October 8, the Court said "amendment will be made by the Court." The Judge directed the officers of the Court to carry out the amendment and this appears to have been done. It is possible to view this as a sufficient compliance with the provisions of O. VI, r. 18. I am not disposed to interfere with the judgment of the lower Court on this question.

On the third question the decision of the lower Court is very unsatisfactory. What has to be decided under the Act is the lowest value that prevailed within seven years before the date of the decree (in the case of suits) or of the order in ejectment (in the case of applications under s. 41, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act). In this case the point of time is October 1936; hence the standard fixed is the lowest value that prevailed between October 1929 and October 1936. Various documents have been relied upon by the lower Court which consist of decrees and judgments showing what values were fixed under the Act in 1930 and in other years. The value fixed in those suits would be the lowest value that prevailed between 1923 and 1930 and so on; it is of no use whatever when we have to see what was the lowest value that prevailed between 1929 to 1936. It is well known that prices of lands fell considerably between 1930 and 1934. For this suit the lowest value that prevailed during this period is the standard. Thus, Exs. E, F, J, K and L, would all be irrelevant. Then the Judge refers generally to suits that came before him within the last ten years and refers to the prices fixed in those suits. Great caution has to be observed in referring to the values fixed in other suits in view of the provisions of the Act. In the view I take on the first question, I do not think it necessary to examine fully the relevant documentary and oral evidence that bears on this question. If it were necessary to decide it I would fix the value at Rs. 1,750 a ground. On my finding on the first question the appeal is allowed and the suit is dismissed with costs throughout.

Criminal Revision No. 3 of 1941

DWARKA SINGH AND OTHERS—

OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 147—Dispute relating to right exercisable only at particular seasons—Magistrate starting proceeding under s. 147 cannot drop it when season is over and cannot pass order which could only be properly passed after hearing all evidence.

When the dispute relates to a right exercisable only at particular seasons, it cannot be the law that it is open to the Magistrate to start a proceeding under s. 147 not only to drop it when the season is over but in addition to pass an order against one of the parties which could only be properly passed after hearing all the evidence that the parties may desire to produce in the case. Where a Magistrate is satisfied that a dispute requiring to be dealt with under the ss. 144, 145 and 147 does exist, it is clearly necessary that he should proceed with the matter in accordance with the law, and the High Court cannot permit him to abuse the procedure by dropping the proceedings on an untenable ground and indirectly passing an order which he could not directly have passed without hearing all the evidence.

Cr. R. against an order of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Jamui, dated November 8, 1940.

Mr. K. K. Banerji, for the Petitioners.

Mr. N. K. Prasad II, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application in revision on behalf of the first party in a proceeding under s. 147, Criminal P. C., which was drawn up on June 4; last on a Police report of April 9, reporting that there was an apprehension of a breach of the peace between the parties as the second party desired to make pucca a bund of stream called the Nata, so much so that the Sub-Inspector had had to depute a constable to the spot to preserve the peace pending the orders of the Magistrate. Upon this report the Magistrate first passed orders under s. 144, Criminal P. C., restraining both parties from going to the site. The proceeding under s. 147 went on for sometime and then on August 13 the learned Magistrate noted that the "parties again say that the question may be decided by local inspection alone and it may not after all be necessary to examine all the witnesses some of whom are not readily available."

The Magistrate held a local inspection as desired by the parties the results of which were noted in the order sheet. In his next order the Magistrate said that there was again a talk of compromise through the intervention of the Court, that both parties agreed to the terms and that they promised to file "petitions" to that effect. On the next date the second party filed a petition accordingly, but the first party raised further disputable points. The Magistrate remarked that this was very unfortunate, and he dropped the proceedings on the ground that there was no imminent danger of a breach of the peace as the river Nata runs only during the rainy season and that therefore he was not competent to decide the question on the merits. He added that the first party, since they refused to compromise, would have ample time to go to the Civil Court and get their rights defined there.

It has been contended by the learned Advocate for the petitioners that the order of the Magistrate calls for interference on more than one ground. In the first place it was not correct for the Magistrate to say that he was no longer competent to decide the question on the merits because there was no imminent danger of a breach of the peace. Section 147 does not require such imminent danger for its application, for "a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace regarding any alleged right of user of any land or water" is enough for initiating proceedings under the section. The learned Advocate has further pointed out that as the river Nata runs only during the rainy seasons, the dispute was of the kind specifically referred to in the proviso to sub-s. (2) of the section—namely a dispute regarding a right exercisable only at particular seasons or on particular occasions. The bund would only be required in the rains and could only be made pucca in the dry season, and proceedings had in fact been commenced under s. 144 in April and under s. 147 in June. Nothing had happened since then to improve the relations of the parties; on the contrary the willingness of the second party to accept the compromise suggested by the Magistrate and the failure of the first party to do so could only have aggravated the situation. In dropping the proceedings moreover, the learned Magistrate indirectly made an order against the first party by observing that since they refused to compromise, they would have ample time to go to the Civil Court and get their rights defined there.

The inquiry under s. 147 is to be conducted in the manner provided in s. 145, and sub-s. (5) of s. 145 provides that nothing in the section shall preclude any party from showing that no such dispute as led to the initiation of the proceedings exists or has existed and that in such case the Magistrate shall cancel his initial order. It cannot be said that the order passed by the Magistrate was in the spirit of this provision at all. The learned Advocate who appears for the second party has endeavoured to support the order by urging that the Magistrate was entitled to drop the proceedings at any time if he was satisfied that no breach of the peace was likely at the time. But it is to be remembered that the dispute in the present case relates to a right exercisable only at particular seasons and it cannot be the law that when such a dispute arises it is open to the Magistrate to start a proceeding under s. 147 not only to drop it when the season is over but in addition to pass an order against one of the parties which could only be properly passed after hearing all the evidence that the parties may desire to produce in the case. It is true, as contended by the learned Advocate for the second party, that whether a dispute is likely or not is a matter for the Magistrate and not for this Court. That is clear from the terms of such sections as 144, 145 and 147 but where a Magistrate is satisfied that a dispute requiring to be dealt with under these sections does exist, it is clearly necessary that he should proceed with the matter in accordance with the law, and this Court cannot permit him to abuse the procedure by dropping the proceedings on an untenable ground and indirectly passing an order which he could not directly have passed without hearing all the evidence. The order in question must therefore be set aside and the Magistrate directed to proceed in accordance with the law and pass a proper order under the section under which he was exercising his jurisdiction.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 304-A, 326—S. 304-A must be read with ss. 336 to 338—Accused while using spear against his assailants accidentally striking deceased who had intervened to separate fighting persons—Accused is guilty under s. 326 and not under s. 304-A.

Section 304-A, Penal Code, must be read along with ss. 336, 337 and 338, of the Code. All the sections are confined in their operation to acts done without any criminal intent, apart from the rashness or negligence which is their essential ingredient. Reading s. 321, with s. 322, it is obvious that the guilt of an accused person remains just the same whether in seeking to inflict simple hurt or grievous hurt, as the case may be, upon one person he actually causes the intended hurt to that person or to some other.

Where in using his spear against his assailants the accused accidentally struck the deceased who had intervened to separate the fighting persons:

Held, that the accused was guilty under s. 326 and his conviction under s. 304-A was illegal.

Cr. A. from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Meerut at Muzaffarnagar, dated November 18, 1940.

The Assistant Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by Chhallu against his conviction and sentence under s. 304-A, I. P. C. He has been sentenced to six months rigorous imprisonment. A fight took place between the appellant and Raja Ram on one side and Shankar and Kala on the other. Girwar deceased came and intervened. The prosecution evidence shows that the appellant had a spear in his hand with which Girwar was stabbed, and he died after some time. It has been found by the learned Sessions Judge—and I think rightly—that the appellant did not intend to strike Girwar and it was by accident that he was struck while he was intervening in separating the persons who were fighting with one another. The learned Sessions Judge has convicted the appellant under s. 304-A, I. P. C. Section 304-A must be read along with ss. 336, 337 and 338, I. P. C. All the sections are confined in their operation to acts done without any criminal intent, apart from the rashness or negligence which is their essential ingredient. In this case there can be no doubt that the appellant was using his spear against his assailants. Where a man strikes at another with a spear, he is committing a criminal offence independently altogether of any element of rashness which may be involved in his striking by chance another person who might come to intervene. Reading s. 321, I. P. C., with s. 322, I. P. C., it is obvious that the guilt of an accused person remains just the same whether in seeking to inflict simple hurt or grievous hurt, as the case may be, upon one person he actually causes the intended hurt to that person or to some other. The appellant must therefore be held guilty under the provisions of s. 326, I. P. C. His conviction under s. 304-A is illegal. I therefore set aside his conviction under s. 304-A, I. P. C., and in lieu thereof convict him under s. 326, I. P. C. The sentence of six months rigorous imprisonment in a case like this cannot be regarded as severe. It is therefore maintained.

AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 13, O. XXI, r. 90, O. XXVI, r. 1—Application to restore petition to set aside sale which has been dismissed for default is not maintainable—Application to set aside sale, if can be dismissed on ground that applicant is adjudicated insolvent—O. XXVI, r. 1, applicability of, to execution proceeding—Practice—Adjournment—Illness of party—Court's duty.

An application to restore to file the petition to set aside sale which had been dismissed for default is not maintainable. 134 Ind. Cas. 806 (1), relied on.

The words "whose interests are affected by the sale" in O. XXI, r. 90 must be construed in their ordinary sense. It is too much to say that merely because a person is adjudicated insolvent his interests are not adversely affected by the sale of property that belonged to him before adjudication. The insolvency of the judgment-debtor does not per se render it incompetent for him to continue proceedings initiated by him under O. XXI, r. 90. 146 Ind. Cas. 521 (2) and 145 Ind. Cas. 855 (3), followed, 180 Ind. Cas. 267 (4), relied on, 94 Ind. Cas. 642 (6) and 154 Ind. Cas. 96 (7), distinguished.

The provisions relating to the issue of a commission do not apply to execution proceedings.

Ordinarily a party is entitled to be given a reasonable opportunity for being physically present himself when his case is being heard, and if his physical presence is made impossible by reason of illness, justice requires that he should be given an adjournment for the purpose of enabling him to be present.

As against the orders of the Sub-Judge, Coimbatore, dated December 9, 1937.

Mr. S. Thayagaraja Ayer, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. C. Viraraghavachari, for the Respondents.

Pandrang Row, J.—These appeals are connected. One is from an order dismissing the application of the appellant to restore to file the petition to set aside a sale presented by him which had been dismissed for default; and the other is an appeal from the order dismissing the petition to set aside the sale. The appellant who was the first defendant in O. S. No. 18 of 1934 had been adjudicated an insolvent and the application was made by him to set aside the sale on various grounds. That application was dismissed for default on December 9, 1937. An application to restore the petition to file was made on the next day and that also was dismissed. As a result we have two appeals from the two orders which were passed against the appellant. So far as the application made on December 10, 1937 to restore the petition to file is concerned it is not seriously argued that such a petition was competent. The learned Subordinate Judge relied on the Full Bench decision in Arunachalam v. Veerappa Chettiar (1) and his finding to the effect that the petition to restore the application to set aside the sale is not maintainable is obviously right. It follows from this that C. M. A. No. 304 of 1938 has no substance and must be dismissed. It is accordingly dismissed with costs.

The other appeal which is from the order dismissing the application to set aside the sale is pressed mainly on the ground that the finding of the Court below that such an application made by the appellant is not competent because he had been adjudicated as an insolvent is wrong, and further on the ground that on the merits it had been held that the appellant was really disabled by illness from attending Court when his application came on for hearing and therefore, the application for adjournment that was made to the Court below on this ground of illness ought to have been allowed instead of being rejected. The first point, namely, the appellant's right to apply to have the sale set aside is governed by the provisions of O. XXI, r. 90, Civil P. C., under which the application was made. That rule provides that any person whose interests are affected by the sale may apply to set aside the sale. The question therefore, for decision is whether the appellant is not a person whose interests are affected by the sale of the properties in question. Those properties were undoubtedly his properties which had been mortgaged and which had been sold in execution of the mortgage decree. His adjudication as an insolvent and the vesting of these properties and all his other properties in the Official Receiver no doubt deprived him of all interest in the property in presenti. But does this mean that he ceased to be a person whose interests are affected by the sale of the properties?

The point is really concluded in our opinion by the Full Bench decision in Subbaraya Goundan v. Veerappa Chettiar (2). That was also a case of an insolvent and it was held that the insolvency of the judgment-debtor did not per se render it incompetent for him to continue proceedings initiated by him under O. XXI, r. 90, and that he had also a right to prefer an appeal from an order dismissing such an application. There is an earlier case reported at p. 359 of the same volume of the Madras Law Journal decided by a single Judge namely Swaminatha Udayar v. Kalyanarama Iyengar (3). We have also been referred to the latest Full Bench decision in Ayyappa Naicker v. Kasiperumal Nayakar (4) in which it is pointed out by the learned Chief Justice that the narrower meaning given to the phrase "whose interests are affected by the sale" in certain decisions is not the correct meaning to be given to those words but that the words should be taken to mean any person whose pecuniary interests are immediately and directly affected and that the decision in Kathiresan Chettiar v. Ramasami Chettiar (5) which interpreted the words to mean "having an interest in the property sold" was wrong, and that decision was overruled expressly by the Full Bench.

In these circumstances it is obvious that the learned Subordinate Judge was not right in coming to the contrary conclusion relying on the cases reported in Hari Rao v. Official Assignee, Madras (6) and Arrepa Venkata Ramanayya v. Bali Bangarayya (7) which were not concerned with the words with which we are now concerned, namely the words found in O. XXI, r. 90, but with the word "aggrieved" found in the Insol. Acts. It seems to us that the words "whose interests are affected by the sale" must be construed in their ordinary sense, and it is too much to say that merely because a person is adjudicated insolvent his interests are not adversely affected by the sale of property that belonged to him before adjudication. For instance, if the insolvent's property is really worth a lakh of rupees and is sold fraudulently for Rs. 10,000, his interests are clearly affected by such a sale. There is no reason why these words should be interpreted in a narrow sense; on the other hand, as observed already, the point is concluded by authority which is binding on us and we would follow it even if it was not so binding because we take the same view. We find therefore, that the lower Court's finding on the right of the appellant to present the application to set aside the sale is wrong and that he is entitled to present the application and to ask the Court to adjudicate upon it.

The only other question that remains is whether the petitioner had a reasonable opportunity of being heard when his application came on for hearing. This would turn on the question of the propriety of the order of the Court below refusing to grant an adjournment which was applied for on December 9, 1937. It is not now seriously disputed that the appellant was really too ill to be present in Court on that day as he had undergone an operation for fistula. There is the evidence of the doctor who attended on him and there is really no room for doubt on the point; and it may therefore be taken as established that the appellant was really disabled by his illness from being present in Court when his application to set aside the sale came on for hearing. In these circumstances the Court below ought to have granted the adjournment that was applied for because the appellant was entitled to have a reasonable opportunity of being present in Court when his application was being heard on its merits. It is said that what the appellant wanted was merely to have his evidence taken on commission and this he could have done in spite of his illness which did not prevent his giving evidence in his own house. This loses sight of the fact that the appellant was not entitled as a matter of course to have a commission taken out because the provisions relating to the issue of a commission do not apply to execution proceedings.

Even otherwise, though there is this reference to examination of the appellant on commission for the purpose of obtaining his evidence, it does not mean that the appellant was not also anxious to exercise his right and privilege of being present himself in Court when his case was being taken up. Ordinarily a party is entitled to be given a reasonable opportunity for being physically present himself when his case is being heard, and if his physical presence is made impossible by reason of illness, justice requires that he should be given an adjournment for the purpose of enabling him to be present. In the present case the Court below was made aware of the illness which prevented the appellant from being present in Court and an application for adjournment had been made on this ground. In the circumstances we are of opinion that the lower Court erred in refusing to grant an adjournment and it follows that the appellant should be given a fresh opportunity of establishing his case. This appeal is therefore allowed and the order of the Court below dismissing the application to set aside the sale is set aside and the application is remanded to the Court below for fresh disposal on the merits according to law. The costs of this appeal will abide the event and should be provided for in the revised order to be passed by the Court below.

B. S. RATH—RESPONDENT

Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act (III of 1895), ss. 5, 3—Service inam lands—Crops growing on, if can be attached—Inam holder ceasing to be useful—Whether ground for depriving him of aforesaid protection—Question as to how much of profits of inam land is necessary to maintain inam-holder—Courts, if can enter into—Madras Government, regarding inam lands as falling under Act—Patna Courts, if bound by it—Party conceding at trial and in first appeal that inam lands were protected—Party, if can resile from his admission in second appeal.

Growing crops on service inam lands cannot be attached in execution of a decree held against the holder of the inam lands. Kannam Naidu v. Latchamma Dhora (1) and 162 Ind. Cas. 1008 (2), relied on., 5 Ind. Cas. 125 (3), distinguished. [p. 798, col. 2.]

The fact that the holder of the inam lands has long since the grant, ceased to be useful, is no ground upon which a Court can hold that he is not entitled to the protection which the law gives to his property. 109 Ind. Cas. 730 (4), relied on. [p. 799, col. 2.]

The Court cannot go into the question as to how much of the profits of the inam lands is necessary to maintain the holder thereof. [p. 799, col. 1.]

The fact that the Madras Govt. regarded the inam lands as falling within the Mad. Hereditary Village Offices Act is not binding on the Patna Court. But where a party concedes at the trial and also in first appeal that the inam lands in question were protected under the aforesaid Act, it is not open to him in second appeal to resile from his admission and to contend that it was not established that the lands in question were protected under the Act. [p. 798, col. 2.]

A. from the appellate order of the District Judge, Ganjam Puri, dated August 4, 1937.

Messrs. L. Panigrahi and H. Mahapatra for the Appellants.

Mr. B. K. Roy, for the Respondent.

Harries, C. J.—This is an appeal by certain insolvents against an order of the learned District Judge of Cuttack made in an insolvency matter. The respondent who is the Official Receiver of Ganjam petitioned the Insolvency Court under ss. 4 and 5, Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, praying: (1) for a declaration of the right of the Official Receiver to receive the usufruct arising from certain lands set out in Schs. A and B which were held by the insolvents from year to year including the crops then standing on the said lands, (2) for an injunction to restrain the insolvents from misappropriating the usufruct from the said lands including the crops then standing thereon.

The petition came before the learned Subordinate Judge of Berhampore and he held that the crops in question did not vest in the Official Receiver and accordingly dismissed the petition. On appeal the learned District Judge reversed the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge and held that these crops did vest in the Official Receiver. He remanded the case to the Court below to deal with the question of the injunction. Against that order this present second appeal has been preferred. The appellants were adjudicated insolvent and it appears that their debts amount to Rs. 50,000. Appellant No. 1 is the owner of certain land which is sadar inam and appellant No. 2 is the owner of a naik inam. These inam lands, it is alleged on behalf of the appellants, cannot be attached in execution of a decree and cannot vest in the Official Receiver on insolvency. The learned Subordinate Judge held that these inam lands were protected from attachment by s. 5, Mad. Hereditary Village Offices Act, 1895 (Act III of 1895) and as the land could not be attached in execution it could not vest in the Official Receiver by reason of s. 28 (5), Prov. Insol. Act. That section deals with what property vests in the Official Receiver when a person is adjudicated insolvent and sub-s. (5) is in these terms:

"The property of the insolvent for the purposes of this section shall not include any property (not being books of account) which is exempted by the Civil P. C. 1908, or by any other enactment for the time being in force from liability to attachment and sale in execution of a decree."

Applying this sub-section, the learned Subordinate Judge held that the crops did not vest in the Official Receiver and dismissed the petition. The learned District Judge appears to have been of opinion that the protection afforded to these inam lands had ceased to exist when the holders of the inam lands had ceased to perform any useful functions. He points out that the protection was given originally on the ground of public policy but in his view public policy of the present time demanded that the insolvent holders of these lands should pay their debts. He accordingly reversed the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge and held that the crops on these lands vested in the Official Receiver. On behalf of the appellants, it has been contended that the present case is clearly within the protection afforded by s. 5, Mad. Hereditary Village Offices Act, 1895. The Act applies to a number of offices which are enumerated in s. 3, and s. 5 is in these terms :

"The emoluments of village offices, whether such offices be or be not hereditary, and, in the scheduled districts as defined in the Scheduled Districts Act, 1874, all such emoluments and other emoluments granted or continued in remuneration for the performance of duties connected with the collection of the revenue or the maintenance of order, shall not be liable to be transferred or encumbered in any manner whatsoever and it shall not be lawful for any Court to attach or sell such emoluments or any portion thereof."

The learned District Judge came to the conclusion that there was a difference between the crops on the land and the land itself. He appears to have thought that though the land itself might be protected by this section the crops which were grown yearly on it would not be within the protection. Land, apart from the produce or the income to be derived from it, is of no value to an office-holder. If land is given as an emolument for the office then clearly what is intended is that the holder of the office should have the crops or the profits arising from the land year by year in payment for the duties which he has performed. In my view, it is impossible to separate the land from the crops growing thereon when dealing with this section. In fact the matter has been considered by the High Court of Madras in a number of cases and it must be remembered that this case comes from the Ganjam district which was within the jurisdiction of the Madras High Court until the new province of Orissa was created. In Kannam Naidu v. Latchanna Dora (1) it was held by a Bench that an attachment by a decree-holder of a crop growing on certain lands in a zamindari which were the inam service lands held by the judgment-debtor as a village servant, was illegal and was rightly set aside by the Court below. That case has been expressly approved in a later Full Bench case of the same High Court, namely

(1) 23 M 492.

Gokavarapu Swami v. Setheyya (2). In that case it was held that the attachment in execution of a decree of growing crops on pottor service inam lands is prohibited by the Mad. Hereditary Village Offices Act, 1895. It appears to me that we are bound to follow the Madras decision having regard to the fact that this case comes from the ex-Madras area.

Mr. Ray who appeared on behalf of the respondent has contended that the decisions of the Madras High Court have not been consistent and he has relied upon the case in Khetrabaro Nawanagaram v. Sobhanapuram Harikrishna (3), in that case it was laid down that s. 5 of the Act in question only prohibits the transfer of ownership and that a permanent lease of land forming the emoluments of an office did not amount to a transfer of ownership and was not prohibited under the Act. It appears to me that this case is clearly distinguishable from the other Madras cases which I have cited. If the holder of a service inam land leases the land he obtains the rent which is the emolument of his office. On the other hand, if he retains the land then the only way in which he can obtain the yearly emoluments is by appropriating the crops of the land which is in his possession. In my view, the law has been clearly and consistently laid down that growing crops on service inam lands cannot be attached in execution of a decree held against the holder of the inam lands.

On behalf of the respondent, Mr. Ray has argued that it was not established in this case that the land in question was service inam land and further that it had not been established that it was land protected by the Mad. Act, 1895. It is clear that the Govt. of Madras had recognized these particular service tenures as falling within the purview of the Act though it is not clear from the standing orders of the Board of Revenue, Madras, why they were so regarded. The fact that the Madras Govt. regarded them as falling within the Act would not bind this Court, but unfortunately for the respondent he has conceded expressly before the District Judge that these lands are lands which are protected by the Mad. Act of 1895. The only point which the respondent has made throughout this case is that the standing crops are not protected from attachment though the land itself is. In my view, it is not open to the respondent in second appeal to take this point because it has been conceded in both Courts that the land is protected by this Act and by reason of that admission the appellants have not adduced any evidence showing precisely why the land does come within the purview of the Act. It was unnecessary for them to establish that having regard to the admission made on behalf of the Official Receiver.

(2) 59 M 354; 162 Ind. Cas. 1008; A I R 1936 Mad. 283; (1936) M W N 88; 43 L W 235; 8 R M 1074 (F B).

(3) 33 M 340; 5 Ind. Cas. 125; 20 M L J 417; 7 M L T 94.

It has been further contended by Mr. Ray on behalf of the respondent that even if the crops are protected by s. 5 of the Act then only such portion is protected as would be necessary to maintain the Sardar and Naik. This is a point that was never investigated in the Court below and there is no finding as to what would be necessary to maintain these two persons. In any event it appears to me that the Court cannot go into that question. These lands were granted to the predecessors of the insolvents in order that the profits arising therefrom should be their emoluments. Presumably the Govt. which granted these lands had come to the conclusion that the profits would provide only a sufficient remuneration for the services which they were called upon to perform. It is too late now to go into the question and to ask the Court to hold that very little is sufficient to remunerate the Sardar and Naik for any services which they may have to perform. Lastly, it was contended on behalf of the respondent that no services are in fact now rendered and that being so the whole purpose of this tenure has disappeared. Accordingly it was urged that the District Judge was right in holding that public policy now demand that the crops should be made available for the creditors. If this argument were sound then the land also should be made available for the creditors but in my view the contention which is put forward on behalf of the respondent has no force. The very same point was urged before their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ashutosh Deo Ghatwal v. Bansidhar Shroff (4). In that case it was found by the High Court that the service which the holder of a service tenure had to perform had long since ceased to be performed and the necessity for such service had long since disappeared. Accordingly the High Court held that the protection which the law had afforded to such a tenure no longer existed and that it was alienable. Dealing with that argument Lord Sumner who delivered the judgment of the Board observed at p. 751* :

"The maxim cessante ratione legis cessat ipsa lex, or any corresponding rule has no application to the present case. The contention really amounts to a claim that a Court of law can inquire into the present utility of an ancient incident of tenure and annul it and its enjoyment by the ruling power, whenever in its opinion the incident has survived its usefulness. This is a matter of policy, not of interpretation of a legislative instrument or of application of general law, and is beyond judicial powers."

It may well be that these Sardars and Naiks have long since ceased to be useful, but that is no ground upon which a Court can hold that they are not entitled to the protection which the law gives to their property. In my judgment, the order of the learned District Judge cannot be sustained. The crops in question cannot be attached in execution of a decree and that being so they did not vest in the Official Receiver when the present appellants were adjudicated insolvent. Accordingly the Official Receiver had no right to the declaration sought for or an injunction. For these reasons I am satisfied that the order of the Court below must be reversed and accordingly I would allow this appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and restore the order of the learned Subordinate Judge. The appellants must have their costs in this Court and in the Courts below.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 182, 211—False complaint against unknown persons, whether offence under s. 182 or s. 211—Complaint by Police, if competent.

An offence, constituted by a false complaint against unknown persons is not one under s. 211, Penal Code, but one under s. 182 of the Code. It is, therefore, within the competence of the Police authorities concerned to complain of that offence and within the competence of the Magistrate, on receiving that complaint, to issue summons under s. 182.

Messrs. Satindra Nath Mookerjee and Samarendra Nath Mookerjee, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sudhansu Sekhar Mukerjee, for the Crown.

(4) 7 Pat. 744; 109 Ind. Cas. 730; A I R 1928 P C 177; 48 C L J 64; 55 M L J 7; 32 C W N 880; 9 P L T 549; 28 L W 798 (P C).

Order.—This rule must be discharged. The petitioner informed the Police that he had been assaulted and robbed by certain persons unknown. Before the conclusion of the Police investigation which was started the petitioner filed a naraji petition before the Magistrate. This complaint was enquired into and a number of witnesses examined after which the complaint was dismissed under s. 203, Criminal P. C.; meantime the Police reported the case to be a false and a complaint was lodged against the petitioner under s. 182, I. P. C. On that complaint the Magistrate directed summons to issue. It is against this order that the present rule is directed. Now it is clear that the offence, if any, constituted by a false complaint against unknown persons is not one under s. 211, I. P. C., but one under s. 182 of the Code. It was therefore within the competence of the Police authorities concerned to complain of that offence and within the competence of the Magistrate, on receiving that complaint to issue summons under s. 182. Whatever be the state of affairs with regard to the naraji petition it has nothing whatever to do with the proceedings instituted by the Police and it is entirely beside the question to argue that the facts underlying both the proceedings were the same facts. In the result the present rule is discharged and the case under s. 182, I. P. C., against the petitioner will proceed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 379—Accused seizing cattle of complainant for certain dues although the complainant had already paid them—Accused subsequently attempting to return animal—Accused held guilty under s. 379.

A contractor for payment of tirni or grazing dues seized an animal of the complainant although the latter had already paid the dues. The contractor subsequently attempted to return the animal to the complainant who refused to take it back:

Held, that the complainant was caused a wrongful loss although the contractor did not intend to deprive the complainant permanently of the animal. The contractor therefore was guilty under s. 379, I. P. C.

Mr. Shabir Ahmed, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Basant Krishen, Assistant Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner Abdul Khaliq has petitioned for revision of his conviction under s. 379, I. P. C., and sentence of Rs. 200 fine. The petitioner is a contractor for payment of tirni or grazing dues in District Multan. The facts as found by the Magistrate after a careful trial are as follows:

"It appears to me that Abdul Khaliq has been seizing the cattle of the defaulters and compelling them to make payment. In this opinion, I am fortified by the fact that the accused got the assistance of Kadar Dad, Tahsil chaprasi. By going with the chaprasi he apparently wanted to show to the people that he had the authority to seize their cattle. Emboldened by his previous conduct, he seized the she-camel of the complainant. . . . The complainant had already paid the tirni due from him under the receipt P. D. Abdul Khaliq also appears to have realized his mistake and he probably made an attempt on the morning of March 20, 1940 to return the she-camel of the complainant who refused to take it back."

The Sessions Judge substantially agreed. He said:

"It can well be understood that the appellant would try to put pressure upon persons who had not paid tirni. In this particular instance he was suffering from a mistake, as tirni had actually been paid in respect of this camel. In view of this mistake it is not at all improbable that he snatched the camel, as the complainant was refusing to pay."

This finding of facts has not been seriously challenged before me. But I am in some doubt about one point; the receipt which the complainant ultimately produced is a receipt for tirni on two camels, but the complainant said he only possessed one. It has not been made clear why the complainant paid tirni on two camels if he only had one. It is possible that there was a bona fide dispute between the parties as to the number of animals on which tirni was due. But this point has not really been gone into, the Courts below being concerned with false evidence on other points produced by both parties. Mr. Shabir Ahmad on behalf of the petitioner contends that on the finding of the learned Sessions Judge the offence of theft has not been committed. However the Sessions Judge said:

"It is not contested that if the version of the complainant is believed a technical case of theft is made out against the appellant."

'Theft' as defined in s. 378, I. P. C., involves taking dishonestly; and 'dishonestly' is defined in s. 24 as doing anything with the intention of causing wrongful gain or wrongful loss. 'Wrongful gain' and 'wrongful loss' are defined in s. 23: 'wrongful gain' is gain by unlawful means of property to which the person gaining is not lawfully entitled: 'wrongful loss' is the loss by unlawful means of property to which the person losing it is legally entitled. Mr. Shabir Ahmad's argument is that the petitioner had no intention of causing wrongful loss to the complainant; he wanted to realize his tirni dues. One of the prosecution witnesses said that it was the custom that the tirni contractor caught any animal which he detected for the first time in the ilaga in order to realize his dues. Such taking would not be larceny under the Law of England. Section 1, Larceny Act, 1916 runs as follows:

"For the purposes of this Act—

A person steals who, without the consent of the owner, fraudulently and without a claim of right made in good faith, takes and carries away anything capable of being stolen with intent, at the time of such taking, permanently to deprive the owner thereof."

It is quite clear that the petitioner had no intention permanently to deprive the complainant of the camel because on the following day he took it into Multan, first to the Tirni Darogha, then to the Revenue Assistant, then to the Tehsilder, all of whom have appeared as defence witnesses. The matter was reported to the Police after this happened and the Sub-Inspector recovered the camel from the petitioner in Multan. The offence therefore would not be larceny under the Law of England. Whereas the Law of England proceeds with reference to an intention permanently to deprive the owner of the property the Law of India as shown by the definition of the I. P. C. proceeds by reference to an intention to cause wrongful loss, and the question is whether the petitioner had the intention of causing wrongful loss to the owner. Mr. Shabir Ahmed quoted a number of cases in which convictions for theft had been set aside in High Courts on the ground that the taking was not dishonest because it was not intended to cause wrongful loss. That which most closely resembles the present case is Aradhun Mundul v. Myan Khan (1) in which a Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that no offence of theft had been committed when a body of men illegally seized cattle and instead of taking them to the nearest pound drove 12 or 14 miles to a more distant pound. There the Magistrate had held that wrongful loss was intended because the pounding of the cattle was effected with the malicious intention of subjecting the owners to additional expense, inconvenience and annoyance. The Bench held that the definition of 'wrongful loss' in s. 23 showed that wrongful loss must refer to the thing dishonestly taken, that is, the animals themselves and that there was no loss.

Here the petitioner without any right wrongfully deprived the owner of possession of the animal. He intended to do this and therefore I think he intended to cause wrongful loss although he did not intend to deprive the owner permanently of his property. I maintain the conviction but I think a fine of Rs. 200 is much too severe for a man who after all is using a wrongful method in realizing Govt. dues. I maintain the conviction but remit the fine and direct that the petitioner execute a bond under s. 106, Criminal P. C., for Rs. 200 security to be of good behaviour for a period of six months.

BAJPAI AND DAR, JJ.

MOHAMMAD MOHTASHIM AND ANOTHER
—DEFENDANT—APPELLANTS

JOTI PRASAD—PLAINTIFF—

RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Creditor's suit against debtor on pro-note—Debtor's suit against creditor under s. 33, U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (XXVII of 1934)—Suits disposed of by one judgment—Identical sum found due to creditor from debtor—Appeal by debtor from decree in suit filed by creditor but not from decree in his own suit—Appeal held barred under s. 11—U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (XXVII of 1934), s. (2)—Request that s. 3 (2) be applied, if can be entertained for first time in appeal.

A creditor instituted against his debtor a suit on a pro-note for recovery of a certain amount. The debtor also instituted a suit against the creditor under s. 33, U. P. Agri. Relief Act. Both these suits were disposed of by a single judgment and the same sum was found due to the creditor from the debtor. The debtor went in appeal from the decree in the suit filed by the creditor but not from the decree in the suit filed by himself:

Held, that the appeal was barred under s. 11, Civil P. C., 7 Ind. Cas. 156 (1), followed and held not overruled by 74 Ind. Cas. 411 (2).

A request that the provisions of s. 3 (2), U. P. Agri. Relief Act may be applied to the case cannot be entertained for the first time in appeal.

F. A. from the decision of the First Civil Judge, Saharanpur, dated February 10, 1937.

Messrs. A. P. Pandey and M. A. Kazmi, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. C. Mital, for the Respondent.

Bajpai, J.—This is an appeal by Sayid Mohammad Mohtashim and Sayid Mohammad Mohtarim who were defendants in suit No. 48 of 1936. The suit was brought by Lala Joti Prasad for the recovery of a certain sum of money on the basis of a promissory note executed by the two defendants on December 1, 1933. There was another suit No. 488 of 1934 filed by Sayid Mohammad Mohtashim and Sayid Mohammad Mohtarim against Lala Joti Prasad under s. 33, Agri. Relief Act. The Court below disposed of the two suits by a single judgment. In the suit brought by the debtors under s. 33, the Court below came to the conclusion that a certain sum of money was due by the debtors to the creditor and a declaratory decree under the provisions of s. 33 (2) was given to the debtors. In the suit filed by Lala Joti Prasad the Court below came to the conclusion that the identical sum of money found due in the other case was payable to Lala Joti Prasad from the debtors. In the suit of the creditor the Court below passed a decree for the recovery of a certain sum of money. We might repeat that the same sum of money was found due from the debtors in the connected suit. The defendants have filed the present first appeal in the suit by the creditor against them. They have not filed any appeal in the suit which they themselves filed under s. 33 and in which it was declared that the same sum of money, as found due in the present case, was payable by them to Lala Joti Prasad, the creditor.

A preliminary objection has been taken that by reason of the failure of the present appellants to file an appeal in the suit for accounts filed by them, the present appeal is incompetent, and reliance is placed on the Full Bench decision of this Court in Zaharia v. Debia (1). In reply to the preliminary objection our attention is drawn to another Full Bench decision of this Court in Ghansham Singh v. Bhola Singh (2). We may mention at once that Zaharia v. Debia (1), was not overruled by the subsequent Full Bench decision; on the contrary there are observations in the judgments of all the learned Judges that Zaharia v. Debia (1), was correctly decided and was applicable to cases where the facts were similar. All that was held in the subsequent Full Bench was that under certain circumstances it might not be necessary for an aggrieved party to file two appeals, more particularly when one of the appeals in the lower Court was decided in favour of that particular party and when the points in dispute in the two appeals were clearly distinguishable. The mere fact that an identical paper decree was passed in two cases was not enough. From what we have said above it is clear that the facts in this case are very similar to the facts in Zaharia v. Debia (1), and the authority of that case is binding on this Bench. The position, therefore, is that the defendant-appellants cannot be permitted to agitate before us that the sum which has been decreed to the plaintiff is liable to reduction. There is, however, one other point in the present appeal, and it is that the Court below while passing a decree in favour of the plaintiff and granting instalments to the defendants fell into a slight error. The operative portion of the order about which grievance is made is to the following effect:

"In case of default being made in payment of any three instalments the entire decretal amount, minus the amount paid, shall fall due at once."

This was in view of s. 3, sub-cl. (4), Agri. Relief Act. But the words used there are:

".....where the number of instalments allowed is six or more and any three instalments are in arrears the decree-holder may, notwithstanding the provisions of any law for the time being in force, immediately enforce payment of the whole amount then remaining due under the decree....."

The contention is that the words mentioned by us as occurring in the operative portion of the order of the Court below should be changed and brought in conformity with the phrasology used in s. 3, sub-cl. (4). This point is not in conflict in any manner with the preliminary objection, and we have the power to make the necessary alteration if the submission advanced on behalf of the appellants is sound. We think there is considerable force in the contention of the appellants, and we, therefore, allow this appeal to this extent that we modify the decree of the Court below by deleting the words, "In case of default being made in payment of any three instalments the entire decretal amount, minus the amount paid, shall fall due at once" and by substituting in lieu thereof the following words, "If any three instalments are in arrears, the plaintiff may, notwithstanding the provisions of any law for the time being in force, immediately enforce payment of the whole amount then remaining due under the decree." The rest of the appeal is dismissed.

There are certain cross-objections by the plaintiff-respondent. Grounds Nos. 1 and 2 of the cross-objections deal with the granting of instalments covering a period of 15 years, and it is submitted that this was not justified under the circumstances of the case. Regard being had to the amount decreed we think the Court below did not exercise its discretion arbitrarily in granting these instalments. Ground No. 3 is to the effect that the Court below should have secured the payment of the decretal amount by charging sufficient immovable property of the appellants. In this connection our attention is drawn to s. 3, sub-cl. (2) of the Act which says that the Court at the time of passing an instalment decree against an agriculturist may either attach his immovable property or declare a charge on such property. It appears that no such request was made before the Court below, at least there is nothing in the judgment of the Court below from which we could infer that any such request was made, and in appeal we cannot possibly find what the circumstances of the defendants are and what the property of the defendants is on which any such charge could be created. We think it is too late in the day for such a request being entertained. There is no force in the cross-objections and they are also dismissed. Under the circumstances we direct the parties to bear their own costs of the appeal and of the cross-objections.

(1) 33 A 51; 7 Ind. Cas. 156; 7 A L J 861 (F B).

(2) 45 A 506; 74 Ind. Cas. 441; A I R 1923 All. 490; 21 A L J 465 (F B).

Hindu Law—Joint family—Insolvency—Father joint with son becoming insolvent—Judgment-creditor of father attaching son's interest in family property before Official Assignee realizing same—Power of Official Assignee to sell son's share is lost—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 73—Decree against grandfather must be deemed to be passed against son and grandson to the extent of their shares in family property—Decree against grandfather, son and grandson—Another decree against grandfather and son only—Grandfather and son adjudicated insolvents—Both decree-holders held entitled to rateable distribution in the interest of grandson.

Where a father who is joint with his son becomes insolvent, the right of realizing the son's share in the family estate under the pious obligation rule devolves upon the Official Assignee or the Official Receiver as the case may be. But, if before the Official Assignee or the Official Receiver takes steps to enforce that right, a judgment-creditor of the father attaches the son's interest in the estate, the power of the Official Assignee or Official Receiver to sell the son's share is lost.

[Case-law relied on.]

Where a money decree is passed against a grandfather who is joint with his son and grandson it must be taken to be a decree passed against the son and the grandson to the extent of their interests in the family property as they are liable to that extent for his lawful debts.

Consequently a creditor who has a decree against the grandfather, son and grandson and another creditor who has a decree against the grandfather and son only, are entitled to rateable distribution under s. 73, Civil P. C., when the grandfather and the son are adjudicated insolvents and the interest of the grandson is attached by one of the creditors before the same has been realized by the Official Assignee or the Official Receiver. 167 Ind. Cas. 503 (11), Overruled.

[Case-law relied on.]

C. R. P. to revise the order of the District Munsif, Dharapuram, dated December 1, 1937.

Mr. K. V. Ramachandra Ayyar, for the Petitioner.

Leach, C. J.—This petition raises a question with regard to the right to rateable distribution given by s. 73, Civil P. C., but when the authorities are examined it is clear that they negative the petitioner's contention. In 1931 the petitioner obtained a money decree against a grandfather, his son and his son's son. The respondent had previously obtained a money decree against the grandfather and the son, but not against the grandson. In 1931, in separate proceedings, the grandfather and the son were adjudicated insolvents. In 1937 the petitioner filed an application for execution of his decree and asked for the attachment of the grandson's interest in the family property. Attachment was ordered and the grandson's interest was sold on August 31, 1937. Before the sale took place the respondent filed an application for the execution of his decree, and he also asked for the attachment and sale of the grandson's share in the family property. On the strength of this application, the respondent claimed to be entitled to share rateably in the sum of Rs. 800, which was the amount realized in the execution proceedings instituted by the petitioner. The petitioner objected to the respondent's claim to rateable distribution, but his objection was overruled by the District Munsif of Dharapuram in whose Court the execution petitions were filed and the assets realized. The District Munsif, in rejecting the petitioner's contention, relied on the decision in Palaniappa Chettiar v. Palani Goundan (1). The petitioner asks this Court to set aside the District Munsif's order under its revisional powers.

It is now well settled law that where a father who is joint with his son becomes insolvent, the right of realizing the son's share in the family estate under the pious obligation rule devolves upon the Official Assignee or the Official Receiver as the case may be. But, if before the Official Assignee or the Official Receiver takes steps to enforce that right, a judgment-creditor of the father attaches the son's interest in the estate, the power of the Official Assignee or Official Receiver to sell the son's share is lost: see Sat Narain v. Behari Lal (2), Bala Venkata Seetharama Chettiar v. Official Receiver, Tanjore (3), Sat Narain v. Sri Krishan Das (4), Gopalkrishnayya v. Gopalan (5) and Arunachalam Chettiar v. Sabaratnam Chettiar (6). Therefore, as the result of the petitioner's attachment of the grandson's share the Insolvency Court lost all its interest in that share, which then became available to the petitioner as the executing creditor and to all persons who became entitled to rateable distribution under s. 73, Civil P. C. Before the proceeds of the grandson's property were brought into Court, the respondent filed his application for execution and thereupon became entitled to rateable distribution.

On behalf of the petitioner, the argument has been advanced that the respondent's decree was not obtained against the same judgment-debtor and therefore s. 73 does not apply, but this argument cannot be accepted. There is ample authority for holding that where a money decree is passed against a grandfather who is joint with his son and grandson it must be taken to be a decree passed against the son and the grandson to the extent of their interests in the family property as they are liable to that extent for his lawful debts. In Ramanathan Chettiar v. Subramania Sastrial (7), where the decree of one of two judgment-creditors was against the father while the decree of the other judgment-creditor was against the father and his son, but the properties from which the assets had been realized by sale were the ancestral properties of the family of which the father and son were undivided members, White, C. J. held that the decrees were "against the same judgment-debtor" for the purpose of s. 295 of the Code of 1882, to which s. 73 of the present Code corresponds. In Ramakrishnan Chettiar v. Viswanathan Chettiar (8), a Full Bench of this Court (Beasley, C. J., Cornish and Pandrang Row, J.J.) held that the legal representative of a deceased person against whom a decree was passed in his lifetime but which was sought to be executed against his property in the hands of his legal representative was the same judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 73. Pandrang Row, J. in whose judgment Beasley, C. J. concurred, observed that it was obvious that a strict literal construction of the expression, "the same judgment-debtor" could not be adopted in the sense that the decrees must be against the same persons eo nomine, and the weight of authority appeared to favour a liberal construction of the expression "the same judgment-debtor." The decision of White, C. J. in Ramanathan Chettiar v. Subramania Sastrial (7) was referred to with obvious approval.

In Swaminatha Aiyar v. Saivu Rowthan (9), Venkataramana Rao, J. held that when a decree has been passed against a manager of a joint Hindu family, the other members of the family must be deemed to be judgment-debtors as well, and where another decree-holder has obtained a decree against the manager and the other members of the family, they are entitled to rateable distribution. The learned Judge considered that the Full Bench decision in Ramakrishnan Chettiar v. Viswanathan Chettiar (8) applied. There was no insolvency in this case, but in a later decision, Palaniappa Chettiar v. Palani Goundan (1), Venkataramana Rao, J. had to consider the same question in connection with insolvency proceedings. In that case the respondent filed a suit against the father and attached before judgment the family property. He eventually obtained a decree, and five months later the judgment-debtor was adjudicated an insolvent. Subsequent to the adjudication, the petitioner, (8) 59 M 93; 159 Ind. with the leave of the Insolvency Court, filed a suit against the father and his sons. The petitioner also applied for attachment before judgment of the son's shares in the joint family property. A decree was in due course passed in his favour and the sons' shares were realized in execution proceedings. Before the sale took place the respondent applied for the execution of his decree by the sale of the family estate and claimed rateable distribution. The Judge held that he was entitled to rateable distribution as the decrees obtained against the father and the father and the sons were decrees passed against the same judgment-debtor. A similar decision was given by the learned Judge in Kundula Ramayya v. Bangaru Rangaraju (10).

The only case which lends support to the petitioner's argument is Arunachalam Chettiar v. Kalayappa Chettiar (11) which was decided by Horwill, J. There the respondents attached before judgment the estate of a joint family consisting of the father and a son. A decree was obtained and the property was subsequently brought to sale, the purchase money being deposited into Court. The father then became an insolvent, and the father's share of the proceeds was handed over to the Official Receiver. The petitioner had obtained a decree against the father on a promissory note and applied for a rateable distribution. His application was filed before the proceeds had been deposited into Court. Horwill, J. considered that the petitioner was not entitled to rateable distribution. It would appear from his judgment that he considered that the Full Bench decision in Ramakrishnan Chettiar v. Viswanathan Chettiar (8) had no application and he laid stress on the fact that the petitioner did not make the son a party to the execution proceedings on the ground that he was liable for his father's debts and that the Court did not know that the decree was obtained against the father for a debt binding on the son. In these circumstances he rejected the petitioner's claim to rateable distribution. This decision is in direct conflict with the judgments of Venkataramana Rao, J., in Palaniappa Chettiar v. Palani Goundan (1) and Kundula Ramayya v. Bangaru Rangaraju (10), and it also runs contrary to the decision of the Full Bench in Ramakrishnan Chettiar v. Viswanathan Chettiar (8). The judgment of Horwill, J. was considered by Venkataramana Rao, J., in Kundula Ramayya v. Bangaru Rangaraju (10), and I am in entire agreement with the observations of Venkataramana Rao, J., which are these :

"The learned Judge seems to be of the opinion that where there is a decree against the father alone it cannot be said that the decree was obtained against the father for a debt binding on the son. It may be so. But once there is a decree against the father the creditor is entitled to enforce the said decree against all the joint family property including the shares of the sons until the sons choose to take exception to it either in execution or by way of a suit that the said debt is one which they are not liable to pay under the Hindu Law. So long as the decree stands and the property sold is joint family property, no question as to the binding nature of the debt arises in the consideration of the question whether the judgment-debtors are the same."

It follows that I consider that the judgment of Horwill, J., to be erroneous and should be overruled. It also follows that I consider that the decision of the District Munsif in the present case was right. The petition will be dismissed but as the respondent has not appeared there will be no order as to costs. I wish to express the appreciation of the Court for the great assistance which it has received from Mr. K. V. Ramachandra Aiyar who has appeared on behalf of the petitioner. He has placed all the relevant authorities before the Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 115—Sale of judgment-debtor's holding in execution of rent decree—Application for setting aside sale under s. 174, Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885)—Subsequent application before Debt Settlement Board for settlement of debts—Notice under s. 34, Bengal Agricultural Debtors' Act (VII of 1936)—Executing Court refusing to stay further proceedings and proceeding with application for setting aside sale—Order held came under s. 47—No revision under s. 115 held competent.

The decree-holder obtained a rent decree against the petitioner and in execution of that decree, brought the holding to sale. The auction-purchaser thereafter deposited in Court the whole of the purchase money. The judgment-debtor then applied for setting aside the sale under s. 174, Ben. Ten. Act. Subsequently the judgment-debtor made an application before a Debt Settlement Board for the settlement of his debts in which he included the debt due under the rent decree referred to above. Upon that, a notice was issued under s. 34, Ben. Agri. Debtors' Act, to the Court in which the execution case was proceeding. The execution Court refused to stay further proceedings and proceeded with the application for setting aside sale :

Held, that the order complained of was an order relating to execution, and that although the auction-purchaser was a party to the proceeding, it was still an order which came within s. 47 of the Code, the question at issue being one in which the judgment-debtor on the one hand and the decree-holder on the other were really interested. This being so, the order was open to appeal and the application under s. 115 of the Code was not, accordingly competent. 188 Ind. Cas. 483 (1), relied on.

C. Rule for setting aside the order of the Sub-Judge, 3rd Court, Tippera, (Comilla), dated July 31, 1940.

Mr. Urukramdas Chakravarty for Mr. Md. Nural Huq Chowdhury, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. Nripendra Chandra Das and Nalini Ranjan Bhattacharjee, for Opposite Party Nos. 5 and 1 to 4, respectively.

Order.—A preliminary objection has been taken to the competency of this rule that the order against which it is directed is an appealable order and that consequently no revision lies. We are of opinion that this objection should prevail. The facts are shortly these : The decree-holder opposite party obtained a rent decree against the petitioner and in execution of that decree, brought the holding to sale. The auction-purchaser thereafter deposited in Court the whole of the purchase money. The judgment-debtor then applied for setting aside the sale under s. 174, Ben. Ten. Act. This was in November 1939. On February 12, 1940, the judgment-debtor made an application before a Debt Settlement Board for the settlement of his debts in which he included the debt due under the rent decree referred to above. Upon that, a notice was issued by the Board under s. 34, Ben. Agri. Debtors' Act, to the Court in which the execution case was proceeding. The execution Court held, on the law as it then stood, that as the sale had already taken place, there was no debt and that therefore there was no proceeding to stay. On July 11, 1940, however, an amendment of s. 34, Ben. Agri. Debtors' Act, came into force, and an explanation was added to this section to the effect that an execution proceeding for the sale of any property shall be deemed to be pending and the debt in respect of which the sale takes place shall be deemed to exist until such sale becomes absolute. Four days later another notice under s. 34 as amended was issued by the Debt Settlement Board, which was received by the executing Court on July 18. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, declined to accept this notice as made within jurisdiction, and in the result, made an order in these terms. "I hold that the execution case cannot be stayed. It will proceed." In other words, by this order he decided to proceed with the application under s. 174, Ben. Ten. Act which had been made to him. It is against this order refusing to stay further proceedings in the execution case that the present rule has been obtained.

In our opinion, there can be no question that on the authority of the decision of a Division Bench of this Court in Nafar Chandra Sardar v. Kali Pado Das (1) it must be held that the order complained of is an order relating to execution, and that although the auction purchaser is a party to the proceeding, it is still an order which comes within s. 47 of the Code, the question at issue being one in which the judgment-debtor on the one hand and the decree-holder on the other are really interested. This being so, we must hold that the order was open to appeal and the application under s. 115 of the Code was not, accordingly, competent. The result is that the rule must be discharged. There will be no order as to costs. This will not prevent the petitioner from filing an appeal before the District Judge from the order if he is so advised, and it will be for him to consider whether, having regard to the pendency of the proceedings in this Court, a proper case may be said to have been made out under s. 5, Lim. Act. Let the record be sent down without delay.

NAGPUR HIGH COURT

Second Appeal No. 253 of 1936

October 8, 1940

STONE, C. J. AND CLARKE, J.

SHIVJIRAM AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—

GULABCHAND—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT
Second appeal—New plea—Point of minority for calling in aid s. 6, Limitation Act, cannot be raised for first time in second appeal—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 4, 19—Acknowledgment expiring on date when the Courts are closed for vacation—Fresh acknowledgment, if can be executed on date when the Court re-opens, in order to save limitation—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 25 (3)—Implied promise to pay contained in acknowledgment—S. 25 (3), if attracted—Novation—Suit based on acknowledgment—Party seeking to base suit on novation—Facts to constitute novation must be alleged and proved.

It is too late to raise the point of the minority of the plaintiff in the second Appellate Court for the purpose of calling in aid the provisions of s. 6 of the Lim. Act, where the point was not raised in either of the Courts below. 18 Ind. Cas. 391 (1), followed.

Section 4 of the Lim. Act has nothing to do with computing the period prescribed under s. 19, Lim. Act. Where on the date when the previous acknowledgment was due to expire the Courts were closed for the summer vacation, the limitation would not be saved even if the fresh acknowledgment was executed on the day when the Courts reopened. The argument that because a suit could have been instituted on the old acknowledgment when the Courts re-opened the party could accept the fresh acknowledgment while still he had right to sue, is not good. 110 Ind. Cas. 76 (2), Held no longer good law, 155 Ind. Cas. 205 (3), 174 Ind. Cas. 277 (4), 169 Ind. Cas. 653 (5), 181 Ind. Cas. 899 (6) and 178 Ind. Cas. 668 (7), relied on.

Unless a promise to pay is in writing it cannot fall within the purview of s. 25 (3), of the Contract Act. The implied promise to pay which is contained in all acknowledgments does not attract the provisions of s. 25 (3), of the Act, because the promise to pay is not in writing. Where the words used in an acknowledgment are: "Juna Hisab Raju Karna Baki Dena Raha Rs. 3,200" which may be translated: "after taking old accounts into consideration there remains to be paid a balance of Rs. 3,200," the acknowledgment does not attract the provisions of s. 25 (3), for there is no consideration for the implied promise contained therein. This is not an "account stated" of the kind which includes items on both sides which the parties have agreed to set off so that only the balance should be paid 174 Ind. Cas. 374 (8), followed.

[Case law relied on].

In a case when the plaintiff has based his case on an acknowledgment, in order to make out a case of novation he should plead the necessary facts to found novation and state what was the original contract and in what way it had been replaced by a new contract.

S. A. from the appellate decree of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Bhandara, dated February 29, 1936.

Mr. Y. V. Jakatdar with Mr. R. R. Dandige, for the Appellants.

Mr. R. N. Padhye with Messrs. K. B. Dwiwedi and J. M. Thaker, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a defendants' appeal against the decree granting the full claim of the plaintiff-respondent. The claim is stated in the plaint to be based on a sarkat or an acknowledgment, which was admittedly executed by the appellants on June 15, 1932 in renewal of an earlier acknowledgment dated June 3, 1929. The appellants took various pleas, those with which we are concerned in this appeal being that the suit was based on a mere acknowledgment executed after the period of limitation had expired in respect of the previous sarkat, and that as it did not fall within the requirements of s. 25 (3) of the Contract Act the suit was barred by limitation. Other contentions were that part of the consideration for the sarkat amounting to Rs. 500 was illegal being of a wagering nature, and they also claimed to have the transactions re-opened under the Usurious Loans Act. All these points were decided against the appellants in the lower Courts.

Before us the learned Counsel for the respondent has endeavoured to side track the point of limitation, which the appellants have taken, by arguing that even if the point be conceded as to the sarkat being beyond limitation when regarded according to the provisions of s. 19 read with s. 4 of the Lim. Act, limitation is saved by s. 6 since the respondent-plaintiff is a minor. Whether this plea would have succeeded if it had been taken in the trial Court is extremely doubtful, but we need not consider it here because in that Court not a word was said about the minority of the plaintiff, nor even in the lower Appellate Court was any such plea taken as far as we can ascertain, since nothing has been said about it in the judgment of that Court. It is before us for the first time that the point appears to have been made. It was held in Panchu Mondal v. Sheikh Isaf (1), by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court before whom the point of minority was similarly taken for the first time that:

"The law expressly imposes upon a Court the duty of throwing out a suit or application filed after the period of limitation fixed therefor, and it may well be that, if a Court were to decree a suit or allow an application which was, in fact, time barred without considering whether it was so or not, it could be said to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law so as to bring the matter within the scope of s. 115 of the Civil P. C. 1908. But we think that the same thing cannot be said of a Court merely because it has omitted to consider ex proprio motu the question whether a litigant was entitled to proceed out of time by reason of some special provision of law, such a question not having been raised by or on his behalf. If a litigant claims the benefit of an exceptional rule of the kind indicated it is clearly his duty both to do so expressly and to establish his claim. This is in accordance with general principles, and is recognised by O. VII, r. 1 of the Code, which provides for the contents of a plaint and lays down a rule applicable, by virtue of s. 141, to applications mutatis mutandis. It is true that the petitioner was described in the headings to certain applications made in this case as a minor represented by a guardian, but that alone was clearly not sufficient to entitle him to the benefit of s. 7 of the Lim. Act; nor was it, in our opinion, sufficient to throw upon the Court the duty of protecting his interests by raising a point of this kind on his behalf."

(1) 17 C.W.N. 667; 18 Ind. Cas. 391.

Although this decision is more than a quarter of a century old, it has so far we are aware, never been dissented from. It is, therefore, too late in this Court to raise the point of the minority of the plaintiff for the purpose of calling in aid the provisions of s. 6 of the Lim. Act.

As regards the questions of limitation which were agitated in the lower Courts, the acknowledgment in suit was executed more than three years after the previous acknowledgment, but the Courts below have held, relying on Jhanaklal v. Gulabchand (2), that limitation is saved by reading the provisions of s. 4 along with s. 19, since on the date when the previous acknowledgment was due to expire the Courts were closed for the summer vacation. Therefore, it is said that the plaintiff could have instituted his suit on the old acknowledgment when the Courts re-opened. Instead of doing so, however, he accepted a fresh acknowledgment while he still had a right to sue and, therefore, it is said that the new acknowledgment was executed within limitation. It is certainly correct that that was the view expressed in Jhanaklal v. Gulabchand (2) and if that were the last word on the subject, then the Courts below would have been perfectly correct to act upon that ruling. In 1935 however the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Maqbul Ahmad v. Pratap Narain Singh (3), while considering the applicability of s. 14 of the Lim. Act to the facts of the case before them, pronounced that s. 4 of the Lim. Act had nothing to do with computing the period prescribed under s. 14. The reasoning of their Lordships applies equally to a case where s. 19 is in issue as to a case where s. 14 applies. That case was followed by a Full Bench of the Lahore High Court in Shanti Parkash v. Harnam Das (4), which was a case under s. 19 of the Lim. Act. The same view was also expressed in Chidambaram Chettiar v. Venkatasubba Naik (5). There are also rulings of the other High Courts which have applied the observations of their Lordships in Maqbul Ahmad v. Pratap Narain Singh (3) to cases under s. 20 of the Lim. Act: vide Shyam Peare v. Ram Autar Singh (6) and Puran Chand v. Abdullah (7). We entirely concur with those observations and hold therefore that the view expressed in Jhanaklal v. Gulabchand (2) is not good law.

If then the appellants are correct in saying that the suit is founded on a mere acknowledgment, then it is barred by limitation. This therefore brings us to the question whether the suit is so founded and whether there was any consideration for the acknowledgment. Under s. 25 (3) of the Contract Act an agreement made without consideration is void unless it is a promise, made in writing and signed by the person to be charged therewith, or by his agent generally or specially authorised in that behalf, to pay wholly or in part a debt of which the creditor might have enforced payment but for the law for the limitation of suits. The nature of an acknowledgment, such as that we are now considering, came before Bose, J., in Ramprasad v. Anandi (8) and his reasoning in that case appears to us to be unanswerable:

"Unless a promise to pay is in writing it cannot fall within the purview of s. 25 (3) of the Contract Act. The implied promise to pay which is contained in all acknowledgements does not attract the provisions of s. 25 (3) of the Act, because the promise to pay is not in writing."

Here the words used in Ex. P-1 are :

"Juna Hisab Raju Karna Baki Dena Raha Rs. 3,200" which may be translated: "after taking old accounts into consideration there remains to be paid a balance of Rs. 3,200". This is not quite the same as the wording of the document which Bose, J. was considering in the above-mentioned case but it is near enough for his reasoning to apply with equal force. Somewhat similar words to those used in Ex. P-1 but in the Gujarati language were used in a document which came under consideration in Balkrishna Mansukhram v. Jayshankar Narayan (9) and the Bombay High Court took the same view as Bose, J. See also Ramchandra Bachharaj v. Muka Gujan Mahar (10),

It follows therefore that, if there is no consideration for the implied promise to pay, s. 25 (3) of the Contract Act will not come to the aid of the respondent. This is not an "account stated" of the kind which includes items on both sides which the parties have agreed to set off so that only the balance should be paid.

It has been strenuously argued before us by Mr. Padhye on behalf of the respondent that here was a novation of the contract which novation is evidenced by this entry and by a post card (Ex. P-4) written on June 20, 1931 by the appellants. As far as the post card is concerned, it is by no means clear that it is addressed to the respondent; it purports to emanate from Heeralal Sheojiram whereas the appellants are Shivjiram and Chotelal, sons of Dhannalal, and it is addressed to Nirbhe Ramji Kanayalalji which is not the name of the plaintiff or of his father. Even if it is a communication from one of the parties to the other, it does not, in our view, evidence any novation. The idea of a novation first appears to have occurred in the lower Appellate Court since it held that as the parties had agreed to pay the amount in ten instalments there was a novation of contract and a fresh cause of action at the time of execution of the sarkat. It is this aspect of the case which Mr. Padhye has elaborated in his argument before us. We consider that the lower Appellate Court, in coming to the conclusion that there was a novation, has lost sight of the exact nature of the appellants' pleading. They did not admit that there was an unconditional agreement to pay the amount in 10 yearly instalments. Their plea was that the acknowledgment and the oral undertaking to pay in instalments were given on the understanding that the accounts would subsequently be shown to them to satisfy them that the amount really was due and that in point of fact no accounts ever were shown to them. The same applies to the oral statement of Mr.

Bapat on behalf of the defendants on February 18, 1935 at p. 12 of the Paper Book. It is clear to us that the plaintiff founded his case on this acknowledgment. He has stated so over and over again. If he wanted to make out a case of novation he should have pleaded the necessary facts to found novation and stated what was the original contract and in what way it had been replaced by a new contract. Mr. Padhye has argued that a letter, which is alleged to have been given by the plaintiff to the defendants at the time when the acknowledgment was executed and which is not forthcoming, falls within the provisions of s. 63 of the Contract Act and therefore time does not begin to run until there was a failure on the part of the defendants to carry out the terms allowed to them by the letter. This argument would, in our opinion, have been a good one if it had been taken at the proper time, but we do not consider that it is a plea that can be advanced for the first time in second appeal.

It follows from the above that the appeal must succeed. It is not therefore necessary to consider the further points which were raised in the case about the wagering nature of the transaction in respect of Rs. 500 of the consideration or as to whether the transactions should have been re-opened under the Usurious Loans Act. Accordingly the lower Appellate Court's decree is set aside and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 105—Suit for framing scheme—Defendant's objection that Court has no power—Objection overruled—In revision, High Court upholding objection and dismissing suit—On order being communicated lower Court passing formal decree dismissing suit—High Court's order held interlocutory—High Court's order held inappropriate—Appeal from decree held competent by virtue of s. 105—Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act (II of 1927), ss. 62, 63, 65—Board, if can be compelled to hold inquiry—Its decision that inquiry is unnecessary, if final—Refusal of Board to frame scheme—Power of Court in the matter—S. 63, scope and interpretation of—Court can settle scheme only where one is framed by Board—Scheme of Act—Court has no residuary power to frame scheme where Board has refused to do so.

In a suit for framing a scheme, the preliminary objection of the defendant that the Court had no power to frame a scheme was overruled. In revision, the High Court upheld the defendant's objection and dismissed the suit. On this order being communicated, the lower Court passed a formal order dismissing the suit:

Held, that the High Court's order was not final but interlocutory and was inappropriate inasmuch as the High Court dismissed the suit itself instead of directing the lower Court to dispose of it according to law. The order fell under s. 105 (1), Civil P. C., and appeal from the decree was competent by virtue of s. 105, since the order affected the decision of the lower Court when passing the decree. Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (1), Mubarak Hussain v. Bihari (2) and 60 Ind. Cas. 631 (3), distinguished.

The Board cannot be compelled under s. 62, Mad. Hindu Religious Endowments Act to hold an inquiry. If it decides that an inquiry is not necessary, the applicants can carry the matter no further. [p. 811, col. 2.]

Section 63 does not give authority to the Court to frame a scheme in the event of the Board refusing to do so. The only orders which the section refers to are: (1) An order settling a scheme; (2) an order modifying a scheme; and (3) an order cancelling a scheme. The words "institute a suit in the Court to modify or set aside such order" are intended only to refer to an order settling a scheme or modifying or cancelling one. [ibid.]

Section 65 is merely intended to give the Court power after a scheme has been framed, to modify or cancel it at any time. Under s. 65 the Court has power to settle a scheme, but it must be a scheme which has first been framed by the Board. [p. 812, col. 2.]

The scheme of the Act was to place in the Board power of supervision of Hindu temples and maths in Madras province and in proper cases the control of the management. As s. 92, Civil P. C., has now been replaced by the Mad. Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1926, so far as Hindu religious endowments of this province are concerned, that Act alone can be looked at for ascertaining what the powers of the Court are. There can be no residuary powers because the former powers are taken away by the present Act. [ibid.]

A. against the decree of the District Court, Tinnevely, in O. S. No. 4 of 1935.

Messrs. K. V. Sessa Ayyangar and R. Desikan, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. E. Rajagopalachariar, for the Respondent.

Leach, C. J.—In 1933 an application was made by 20 worshippers of the Sri Alagiamambirayar temple in the Tinnevely District to the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Board for an order directing an inquiry to be held into the question whether the Board should frame a scheme for the administration of the temple and its endowments. The Board held an inquiry and as the result of the investigation decided that it was not necessary to frame a scheme. The applicants then filed a suit in the Court of the District Judge of Tinnevely with the object of obtaining the settlement of a scheme under a decree of the Court. The suit was defended by the trustee, who is the respondent in this appeal. It is unnecessary to set out all the objections to the suit. It is sufficient to say that the main objection was that the Court had no power to frame a scheme. On this question a preliminary issue was framed and was answered by the District Judge in favour of the plaintiffs. Thereupon the respondent applied to this Court to reverse the order in exercise of its revisional powers. The application was heard by Venkataramana Rao, J., who decided that the District Judge had erred in holding that the suit lay. In addition to allowing the petition the learned Judge dismissed the suit. On the order being communicated to him the District Judge passed a formal decree dismissing the suit with costs. The appeal is from that decree. Before proceeding to discuss the merits of the appeal it is necessary to dispose of a preliminary objection raised by the respondent, who says that the order of Venkataramana Rao, J. was final and therefore, the appeal does not lie.

Section 115, Civil P. C., which confers upon the Court its powers of revision states that if the Subordinate Court appears to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, the Court may make such order in the case as it thinks fit. The section only contemplates an order which is appropriate to the application, and the order of Venkataramana Rao, J., dismissing the suit was not appropriate. Having decided that the District Judge had erred on the preliminary issue he should have set aside his ruling and directed the District Judge to dispose of the suit in accordance with law and not to have dismissed the suit himself. The order of Venkataramana Rao, J. was an interlocutory order and the preliminary objection must be decided on this footing. In support of his contention that the decision of Venkataramana Rao, J. is final the learned Advocate for the respondent has quoted Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (1), Mubarak Hussain v. Bihari (2) and Hook v. Administrator

(1) 6 A 269; 11 I A 37 (P C).

(2) 16 A 306; A W N 1894, 97.

General of Bengal (3), but as the present case is clearly governed by s. 105, Civil P.C., they are not in point and I do not propose to pause to examine them. That section says:

"(1) Save as otherwise expressly provided, no appeal shall lie from any order made by a Court in the exercise of its original or appellate jurisdiction; but, where a decree is appealed from, any error, defect or irregularity in any order, affecting the decision of the case, may be set forth, as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-s. (1), where any party aggrieved by an order of remand made after the commencement of this Code from which an appeal lies does not appeal therefrom, he shall thereafter be precluded from disputing its correctness."

Authority is given here to the Court to set aside an erroneous order affecting the decision of a case, unless it be an order of remand from which an appeal lies and no appeal is filed. Sub-s. (2) appeared in the Code for the first time in 1908. Now the order of Venkataramana Rao, J., certainly affected the decision of the case. As the result of the order, the District Judge was left with no other course open to him but to dismiss the suit. Therefore, the order is one which directly falls within sub-s. (1) of s. 105. If the argument of the learned Advocate for the respondent were to be accepted it would mean that this suit would be decided by an interlocutory order and there would be no appeal either to this Court or to the Privy Council. The order of Venkataramana Rao, J. was not appealable. The Letters Patent of this Court expressly provide that an order passed in revision shall not be subject to an appeal and s. 3, Civil P. C., says that no appeal shall lie to His Majesty in Council from the decree or order of one Judge of a High Court. Therefore, the order of Venkataramana Rao, J. does not fall within the purview of s. 109 of the Code which provides for appeal to His Majesty in Council from a final order or a decree of a High Court. The present appeal is from the decree, and as the order affected the decision of the Court when passing the decree it is clearly open to this Court by virtue of s. 105 to consider its correctness.

I will now turn to the merits of the appeal. Section 62, Mad. Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1926, says that when the Board has reason to believe that the trustee of a math or excepted temple has been mismanaging the endowments or has been spending or alienating them for improper purposes, or when not less than 20 persons, having interest, make an application to the Board stating that in the interests of the proper administration of the endowments a scheme of administration should be settled, the Board may hold an enquiry. The Board cannot be compelled to hold an inquiry. If it decides that an inquiry is not necessary, the applicants can carry the matter no further. So much is conceded by the learned Advocate for the appellant. The decision of the appeal depends upon the interpretation to be placed on sub-s. (4) of s. 63, but the sub-section must be read in conjunction with the first part of sub-s. (1) and sub-s. (3). The first part of sub-s. (1) of s. 63 reads as follows:

"If after making the inquiry referred to in s. 62, the Board is satisfied that the trustee concerned has mismanaged the endowments of such math or temple or has spent or alienated them for improper purposes, or that, in the interests of the proper administration of such endowments, a scheme of administration should be settled, the Board may, after consulting in the prescribed manner the trustee and the persons having interest by order settle a scheme of administration for the endowments connected with such math or temple."

Sub-ss. (3) and (4) are in these words:

"(3) The Board may at any time by order and in the manner provided in sub-s. (1) modify or cancel a scheme settled under that sub-section.

(4) Every order of the Board under this sub-section shall be published in the prescribed manner.

The trustee or any person having interest may within six months of the date of such publication institute a suit in the Court to modify or set aside such order."

For the appellant it is said that inasmuch as sub-s. (4) gives a person having interest in an endowment to institute a suit in the Court to modify or set aside an order under this section, the power must include a power to the Court to frame a scheme, if the Court sets aside an order of the Board refusing to do so. It is also said that the Court has power to frame a scheme by reason of s. 65 to which I shall refer later. It is further said that apart from the provisions of the Mad. Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1926, there is power in the Court to frame a scheme. I agree with Venkataramana Rao, J., that s. 63 does not give any authority to the Court to frame a scheme in the event of the Board refusing to do so. The only orders which the section refers to are: (1) An order settling a scheme; (2) an order modifying a scheme; and (3) an order cancelling a scheme. I consider that the words "institute a suit in the Court to modify, or set aside such order" are intended only to refer to an order settling a scheme or modifying or cancelling one.

Mr. Sesha Ayyangar on behalf of the appellant has referred us to Venkatasami v. Stridevamma (4) and Reasut Hossain v. Hadjee Abdullah (5). In Venkatasami v. Stridevamma (4), a Full Bench of this Court held that an order rejecting an application for the appointment of a Receiver was an order passed under s. 503 of the Code of 1882, (now O. XL, r. 1) and was, therefore, appealable under s. 588, cl. (24) (now O. XLIII, r. 1, cl. 2). An appeal was given from an order appointing a Receiver, but nothing was said with regard to an appeal from an order refusing to appoint a Receiver. The Court considered that as there was an appeal from an order appointing a Receiver it followed that there must be an appeal from a negative order. This meant that on appeal the Court could appoint a Receiver, if an appointment had been improperly refused by the Court below. Mr. Sesha Ayyangar says that inasmuch as the Court has the power to set aside an order of the Board to frame a scheme under s. 63 it can set aside the order refusing to settle a scheme, and if it does so this must imply a power to frame a scheme. This does not follow. The Act may vest in the Board the power to frame a scheme and in the Court only the power to modify or cancel it, and this is my reading of the Act. The Board must in the first instance frame a scheme. The Court can modify or cancel it, but it cannot take initial action. Therefore, it is not a question of the Court having power to do something and refusing to do it, as in Venkatasami v. Stridevamma (4) and that makes all the difference. The decision in that case was based on Reasut Hossain v. Hadjee Abdullah (5) the second case quoted by Mr. Sesha Ayyangar. If sub-s. (4) were to be held to apply to the order of the Board in this case, what would be the result? The Court would have to set aside the order, but it could not pass any further order, because the power to frame a scheme is in the Board. Venkataramana Rao, J. put the position here very aptly in these words :

"So when the Board declines to frame a scheme there is no use in the Court setting at naught that discretion because there is no power in the Court to compel the Board to frame that scheme. Unless the Court has got that power it would be futile to set aside such an order."

In my opinion the Legislature never intended sub-s. (4) to have application except to orders of the Board framing schemes or modifying or cancelling them. This brings me to the second contention of the appellant. Section 65 says that "any scheme of administration which has been settled by a Court under s. 63," or which under s. 75 is deemed to be a scheme settled under the Act may, at any time, for sufficient cause be modified or cancelled by the Court in a suit instituted by the Board or the trustee or any person having interest but not otherwise. Mr. Sesha Ayyangar says that the words "any scheme of administration which has been settled by the Court under s. 63" must be read as meaning that the Court is given power to settle a scheme in any circumstances. I cannot read s. 65 in this way. The Court has power to settle a scheme, but it must be a scheme which has first been framed by the Board. Section 65 is merely intended to give the Court power, after a scheme has been framed, to modify or cancel it at any time.

(4) 10 M 170 (F B).

(5) 2 C 131; 3 I A 321; 26 W R 50; 3 Suther 221 (P C).

I am also unable to accept the argument that there is a residuary power in the Court to frame a scheme. The first Act relating to the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments was passed in 1923. Before then a scheme for the management of a temple could only be framed in accordance with the provisions of s. 92, Civil P. C., and the suit required the sanction of the Advocate-General to its institution. It is common ground that since 1923, s. 92, has ceased to apply and that the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Board has taken the place of the Advocate-General. The scheme of the first Act was to place in the Board power of supervision of Hindu temples and maths in this province and in proper cases the control of the management, and this is the scheme of the present Act. As s. 92, Civil P. C., has now been re-placed by the Mad. Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1926, so far as Hindu religious endowments of this province are concerned, that Act alone can be looked at for ascertaining what the powers of the Court are. There can be no residuary powers because the former powers are taken away by the present Act. The only section which has application here is s. 63, and, as I have indicated, this section, in my judgment, gives no power at all to the Court to frame a scheme when the Board has refused to do so. I consider that Venkataramana Rao, J., correctly interpreted the Act in his order of revision and consequently I hold that the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

Krishnaswami Ayyangar, J.—I agree with my Lord the Chief Justice on both the points dealt with in the judgment just now delivered. On the second point, which turns on the true construction of the last sentence in s. 63 (4), Mad. Hindu Religious Endowments Act, I desire to add a few words of my own. That clause runs as follows :

"The trustee or any person having interest, may within six months of the date of such publication institute a suit in the Court, to modify or set aside such order."

The words "such publication" and "such order" in this clause have reference obviously to the kind of order mentioned just previously, in the earlier portion of the same sub-section which directs the publication of "every order of the Board under this section" in the prescribed manner. The order with which we are here concerned is no doubt an order of the Board, but is it also one under this section so as to give to the appellants a right to institute a suit to modify or set it aside? I was at first impressed by the argument that the point is covered by the decision of the Full Bench in Venkatasami v. Stridevamma (4), but on further consideration, I think that that view cannot be sustained. The above decision was rendered no doubt on similar words but occurring in a different enactment, namely, the Civil Procedure Code, 1882. By s. 588 (24) of that Code, corresponding to O. XLIII, r. 1 (s) of the present Code, an appeal was allowed against, amongst others, orders under s. 503. Section 503, contained the various provisions relating to the appointment of a Receiver, his rights and duties, etc. but said nothing about the dismissal of an application made under the section, a feature which is common to both the old and the new Codes. The argument was advanced that an appeal was permitted only in respect of an affirmative order, that is to say orders granting the application, and not against an order refusing it. The contention was negatived, the Court holding that even an order rejecting the application was an order passed under the section and was therefore appealable under s. 588 (24). The result was that, in the view of the Full Bench, an order under the section, comprehended both classes of orders positive as well as negative. Here then it is said, we have a construction of the words orders under a section, and the question is, are we free to adopt a different construction in respect of what is practically the same language in the Mad. Hindu Religious Endowments Act?

Two reasons in particular have operated on my mind in persuading me to assent to the opinion expressed in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice. In the first place, it is to be observed that there is nothing in common between the Civil P. C., and the Hindu Religious Endowments Act; or to say the same thing in other words, the two statutes are not in pari materia. Further, the judgment of the Full Bench appears to have proceeded on considerations, which have little or no application to an Act like the one with which we are concerned. Parker, J. felt compelled to place a reasonable construction on the Act, and pointed out that the opposite construction could not have been intended by the Legislature. Brandt, J. laid stress on principles and expediency, and held that the view of the Full Bench was more consonant with the general principles of the Code and the rules of construction. But it cannot be said that there is anything in the general principles of the Hindu Religious Endowments Act, which, as pointed out by my Lord, can be said to lend support to the construction accepted in the case cited. The purpose and scope of the Mad. Hindu Religious Endowments Act are quite different and leave no room for doubt that it was the intention of the Legislature to vest the supervision and control of religious institution in the Board composed of men specially qualified by their knowledge and equipment to discharge the duty entrusted to them by the Act. It is therefore right to say that in a statute of this kind, we should require language more explicit than we have, to give a right of suit against the decisions of a body composed presumably of persons having expert knowledge in the special field of Hindu religion and charities.

Secondly, and this in my view is a more powerful argument against the appellant, the Court should be slow to adopt a construction which is not likely to afford a real and effective remedy to the complaining party. The initial duty of framing a scheme rests with the Board and with the Board only, and all that the Court can do, assuming it has the power, is to modify or set aside its order of refusal, and not to compel it to frame a scheme. There is nothing in ss. 63, 64 and 65, to warrant our holding that the Court by its decree can itself frame a scheme in the suit. To imply such a power in the Court from the opening words of s. 65, namely, "Any scheme of administration which has been settled by a Court under s. 63," is to place an unreasonable construction on these words, and cannot be permitted. Is the Court then to be placed in a position in which it is merely to set aside the order and still leave it open to the Board to refuse to frame a scheme, in other words to stultify itself? I think not. I therefore feel that whatever might be the meaning of the words in question in some other enactment or in some other context, it is not correct to construe s. 63, as conferring a right of suit against a refusal to frame a scheme under the section.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT

Notice of Motion in Suit No. 173 of 1940

December 13, 1940

BLACKWELL, J.

KANHAIYALAL HARKARANDAS—

PLAINTIFF

MOHANLAL RAMVALLABH—

DEFENDANT

Right of suit—Cause of action—Anticipation of criminal complaint—Civil suit for declaration that there is no cause of action for the anticipated criminal complaint cannot lie—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151—Injunction, if can be granted in personam against party restraining it from proceeding with criminal complaint in Court outside jurisdiction of High Court—Injunction was refused in peculiar circumstances of the case.

The mere fact that A is supposed to contemplate the bringing of an action against B or that A may have stated that he has grounds for such an action, does not entitle B to institute an action against A, to have it declared that A has not a good cause of action against B.

High Court has inherent jurisdiction to grant an injunction in personam against a person who has submitted to the jurisdiction to restrain him from proceeding with a criminal complaint in a Court which is not subject to the jurisdiction of that High Court. This jurisdiction, however, should be exercised with extreme caution.

[Bombay High Court refused to grant injunction in personam against a defendant who had submitted to its jurisdiction restraining him from proceeding with the complaint filed by him against the applicant in the Court of a Magistrate at Benares, charging him with an offence of criminal misappropriation as the plaintiff had not in the first instance applied to the Criminal Court for the stay of criminal proceedings, had instituted the civil suit with the object of forestalling and preventing the criminal proceedings, and there was a long delay in praying for the injunction.]

Mr. K. A. Somjee, for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. M. V. Desai and V. K. Chhatrapati, for the Defendant.

Order.—This is a notice of motion taken out by the plaintiff on November 13, 1940, for an order that the defendant may be restrained from proceeding with a complaint filed by him in the first Class Magistrate's Court at Benares. That complaint was filed on February 14, 1940. But a letter dated January 19, 1940, the defendant's Advocate alleged that the plaintiff had been entrusted with ornaments by the defendant worth over Rs. 7,600 a list of which was appended to the letter on the plaintiff's assurance that they would be returned to the defendant whenever required, that the plaintiff had written several letters to the defendant assuring him that he would return the same, that in spite of repeated demands he had not done so, and had dishonestly misappropriated the ornaments. The letter demanded the return of the ornaments within a week of the receipt of the notice and stated that in default the defendant would be constrained to take steps for the prosecution of the plaintiff under s. 406, I. P. C. That letter was not in fact received by the plaintiff until January 29, 1940. Without replying to that letter the plaintiff, on January 31, 1940 filed this suit. In the plaint he alleges that on or about February 10, 1939, he lent Rs. 2,000 to the defendant who promised to pay that amount in Bombay with interest at 6 per cent., after a month or two that payment had been demanded and the defendant had refused to pay and by his Advocate's letter of January 19, 1940 to which I have referred and which is Ex. (A) to the plaint, put forward a false claim against the plaintiff. The plaint goes on to allege that the plaintiff had at no time any ornaments of the defendant's wife and submits that the plaintiff is entitled to a declaration that he is not in possession of any ornaments of the defendant's wife and that the defendant had no moneys in deposit with the plaintiff that fact having been alleged both in the letter of January 19, 1940 and in the plaint.

It is to be observed that the first cause of action alleged in the plaint is in respect of an alleged loan by the plaintiff to the defendant of Rs. 2,000. The declaration is asked for with the object of getting a decision that the plaintiff had not in his possession at any time the ornaments of the defendant and that he had no moneys on deposit with him from the defendant. I do not express any opinion as to whether that declaration is well-founded in law or not, inasmuch as it will fall to be decided on the hearing of the suit and it would not be proper for me to do so. I do, however, refer to some observations made by Joyce J., in North Eastern Marine Engineering Co. v. Leeds Forge Co. (1). That case arose out of s. 32, Patents, Designs and Trade-marks Act,

1883, but the learned Judge made some observations of a general character, with which I respectfully agree that seem to be pertinent to the declaration asked for in the present plaint. The learned Judge said (p. 329*):

"Speaking generally, in simple cases not within s. 32 of the Act the mere fact that A is supposed to contemplate the bringing of an action against B or that A may have stated that he has grounds for such an action does not, in my opinion, entitle B to institute an action against A, to have it declared that A has not a good cause of action against B. I think that is so whether the result depends merely upon questions of law, or upon facts as to which there would or might be a conflict of evidence and a protracted trial. No doubt delay may in certain cases furnish a good ground for defence; but ordinarily an intending plaintiff may postpone his action as long as he pleases, at the risk of finding himself ultimately barred by some statute of limitations and he may choose his own time for commencing proceedings."

I am by no means satisfied that that declaration was not asked for in the hope that it might induce the defendant not to launch criminal proceedings as, in my opinion, he was clearly entitled to do and in the hope that he would be persuaded to deal with the matter by way of counter-claim in the present suit. Having launched that suit, the plaintiff replied to the letter of January 19, by a letter from his attorneys dated February 1, 1940, in which he referred to the claim put forward by the defendant as a bogus demand intended to forestall the plaintiff's claim for Rs. 2,000. The letter goes on to inform the defendant that the plaintiff has filed a suit to recover the amount lent and advanced and for a declaration that the claim for the ornaments and moneys made by the defendant was not justified. The criminal complaint was filed by the defendant in the Court of the City Magistrate, Benares, on February 14, 1940. A copy thereof is set out in Ex. B to the plaintiff's affidavit of November 12, 1940. It is a complaint made not only against the plaintiff but also against accused No. 2 who is alleged to be the munist of the plaintiff. That complaint alleges dishonest misappropriation and conversion of ornaments entrusted by the complainant to the munist on the plaintiff's behalf. There appears to have been some delay in serving the criminal process upon the plaintiff. He had certainly been served before May 18, 1940, because on that date he filed a petition to quash the criminal proceedings on the ground that the matter was merely a civil dispute and that the Court had no jurisdiction. The Court dismissed that application, there was an application in revision which was dismissed by the District Magistrate on August 16, 1940 and the matter has now gone to the High Court of Allahabad and is still pending before that Court.

Mr. M. V. Desai who appears for the defendant concedes that this Court has got the power to make an order in personam against his client, to restrain him from proceeding with that criminal complaint, if in the exercise of its discretion the Court thinks proper to do so. A number of authorities were cited to me, but, in view of that concession, it is, in my opinion, unnecessary to refer to any of them. The grounds upon which the order is asked for are set out in the said affidavit of the plaintiff. In para. 3 thereof it is alleged that the complaint filed by the defendant at Benares is only for the purpose of stifling this suit and to put the plaintiff to unnecessary harassment, annoyance and costs and the same is of a blackmailing character and that it has been filed for the purpose of bringing undue pressure upon the plaintiff and similar allegations are made in para. 5 of the affidavit.

I have to consider whether the complaint was filed for that purpose. I have already drawn attention to the fact that by the letter of January 19, 1940, written on behalf of the defendant to the plaintiff the claim was made for the return of the ornaments and for payment of moneys alleged to have been deposited and that letter contains a statement that it was then the intention of the defendant, if his demand was not complied with, to file a criminal complaint for misappropriation. The intention to file that complaint was made before any demand had been put forward on behalf of the plaintiff in respect of the alleged loan of Rs. 2,000 and without even replying to the letter this suit was filed, the curious declaration to which I have drawn attention was inserted and I am now asked to say that the object of that criminal complaint was to stifle a suit which had not even been threatened and in respect of which it had not been suggested that there was any cause of action. I entirely decline to accede to such a suggestion. In my opinion, the boot is on the other leg, and the civil suit was filed and that curious declaration was inserted with the object and in the hope of forestalling and if possible preventing the threatened criminal proceedings. I have been strongly pressed by Mr. Somjee, the plaintiff's Counsel, to grant an injunction restraining the criminal proceedings upon the ground that the issues are the same and that it is a great hardship upon the plaintiff to have two Courts trying issues of a similar character. Mr. Desai for the defendant, without prejudice to his submission that the motion was unjustified and ought to be dismissed with costs, offered to have the counter-claim stayed pending the hearing and final determination of the criminal proceedings. Mr. Somjee for the plaintiff is unwilling to accede to that suggestion, and that being so, I shall not make any order staying the counter-claim. Mr. Somjee, on the other hand, has pressed me to expedite this suit with the object of getting the issues arising out of the counter-claim decided if possible before the criminal case comes up for hearing. I here point out that this motion was not taken out until November 13, 1940, although the criminal proceedings were instituted on February 12, 1940. After he had been served with the criminal process, instead of applying promptly if so advised to the Criminal Court for a stay of the criminal proceedings pending the trial of this suit in which the plaintiff had asked for the declaration to which I have referred, and which according to his contention would have justified an application to the Criminal Court for a stay even before the counter-claim was filed, he chose to wait until November 13, 1940, and in the meantime to put the defendant to considerable costs by applying to the Criminal Court to quash those criminal proceedings upon the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction. In my opinion, the factor of delay is one that I should consider. On an application of this character, and quite apart from the merits of the matter, I should not have been disposed to make an order on this motion after such a long period of delay.

On the merits I am of opinion that the plaintiff makes out no case of harassment. I have already drawn attention to the fact that it does not lie in his mouth to suggest that the complaint was filed for the purpose of stifling this suit which at the time the notice of intention to file such a complaint was given had not even been suggested; nor for the same reason can it be suggested that that complaint was of a blackmailing character, and, in my opinion, it was grossly improper for the plaintiff even to suggest such a thing in his affidavit in the events which had happened. Whatever the decision before the Criminal Court may be, the civil rights and liabilities of the parties on the counter-claim will fall to be determined on the evidence adduced in this Court. I have been strongly pressed by Mr. Somjee to grant an injunction on the ground that if a judgment is given in his favour on the counter-claim in the present suit it would be admissible in evidence in the criminal proceedings and might have great weight with the Magistrate in coming to a conclusion upon the criminal complaint. Having regard, however, to the fact that that complaint was instituted before this suit was even suggested, that in my opinion the declaration asked for in this suit was for the purpose, if possible of forestalling the criminal complaint, and that if he can prove criminal misappropriation the defendant is entitled to proceed by way of criminal process, I am clearly of opinion that I ought not to grant an injunction.

I may refer to one further aspect of the matter. This application is based upon the inherent jurisdiction of this Court under s. 151, Civil P. C. Although a Civil Court no doubt has jurisdiction to grant an injunction in personam against a person who has submitted to the jurisdiction to restrain him from proceeding with a criminal complaint in a Court which is not subject to the jurisdiction of this High Court, this is a jurisdiction which in my opinion should be exercised with extreme caution. It was open to the plaintiff if he had been so minded to apply to the Criminal Court for a stay of those criminal proceedings. He has not done so. In my opinion, he ought not to have resorted to an application to this Court based upon its jurisdiction under s. 151 without first exhausting the other remedy which was open to him by an application to the Criminal Court for stay of the criminal proceedings upon the ground that the issues involved had been raised by the plaintiff by his declaration in the civil suit. In all the circumstances I am clearly of opinion that this motion was not justified. I dismiss it with costs. As regards the costs which were reserved, I think it is proper that the defendant should bear those costs himself, and I make no order in relation to them.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Second Appeal No. 436 of 1935

April 18, 1939

WADSWORTH, J.

PARAPPIL ASSYA UMMA—APPELLANT

*versus*PALOONTEAKATH MOOSSA AND OTHERS
—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI rr. 27, 29 — Failure of party to examine material witness though available, if sufficient reason to examine him in appeal—Absence of recorded objection to admission of evidence in appeal—Provisions of rr. 27 and 29, if can be ignored in all cases.

When an essential piece of evidence, obviously necessary for the proof of a party's case and available to that party, has not been adduced in the trial Court, the Appellate Court will not ordinarily allow the production of the missing evidence in appeal, merely because the trial Court has commented adversely on the failure of the party to prove his case as completely as was obviously necessary. 132 Ind. Cas. 721 (1), relied on. [p. 818, col. 1.]

The failure of a party to examine a material witness when that witness is available and the consequent existence of a gap in his case is not ordinarily a sufficient reason for examining that witness in appeal, though there may possibly be circumstances in which such a procedure would be justified, as, for instance, if the whole case was in such a muddle that the Judge was unable to pronounce a satisfactory judgment without further materials. [p. 819, col. 1.]

Although when both parties agree that further evidence is necessary and admission of that evidence is made by consent, any failure on the part of the Judge to record in due form the reasons for the admission of that evidence is not a matter which would justify the reversal of the judgment or the rejection of the additional evidence. Yet it is not a rule that in all cases where there is no recorded objection to the admission of evidence in appeal under O. XLI, r. 27, Civil P. C., the provisions of r. 27 and the procedure laid down under that rule and under r. 29 can be treated as of no importance. [p. 818, col. 2.]

S. A. against the decree of the District Court, North Malabar, in A. S. No. 276 of 1932.

Mr. P. Govinda Menon, for the Appellant.
- Mr. K. Kuttikrishna Menon, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for maintenance by a Muhammadan wife who is now a widow. The defence was that she was divorced in 1919 by her husband and the evidence was mainly directly to the factum of divorce. There was a remand by the District Judge who first heard the appeal for a decision on the question, "what is the school of law governing the parties" and fresh evidence was allowed on this question. When the case was re-heard by the trial Court both parties agreed that they were governed by the Shafi-Sunni law and the trial Court reiterated the previous finding that there was no divorce. In the course of the judgment he found it necessary to make observations regarding the failure of the defence to examine the Kazi alleged to have received the divorce letter and to have maintained the register of divorces and he observed that Ex. II, a register produced by the Mukri of the mosque, did not appear to be a regular book kept by the Kazi. When the matter came up again in appeal, there was a fresh District Judge who in the course of arguments appears to have decided to permit the defendants to examine the Kazi. On November 15, 1934, the B diary contains the following entry: "Arguments closed for the present. Adjourned to December 6, 1934, to enable the appellants to examine Kadiar." On the same day the defendants presented a petition supported by an affidavit requesting that the Kazi be summoned and examined, the only reasons given being that the Kazi was cited in the lower Court as a witness to prove the fact of divorce, that he did not appear in person and sent certain documents through the Mukri that his evidence was most material and that he could not be examined in the lower Court as he did not appear in person and the evidence on record therefore was to some extent incomplete. It does not appear that any notice of this petition was given to the plaintiff and the order consists of the one word "allowed" written in the handwriting of somebody also, presumably a clerk, and initialled by the learned District Judge. The judgment contains the following reference to the admission of this further evidence in appeal:

"In the course of the arguments it became clear that the most material evidence regarding the factum of divorce could be furnished only by the Kazi, to whom the deceased Athermankutti is said to have communicated a notice of the talak. In these circumstances the prayer of the learned Advocate for the appellants that the Kazi should be summoned and examined was granted."

Then later on the learned Judge observed: "His evidence fills up the serious gaps that existed in the previous evidence produced by the defendants and leaves no room for doubting that Ex. 2, as well as the new registers now marked Ex. 2 (a) and 2 (b) are genuine documents kept under the direction and supervision of the Kazi."

It is contended for the plaintiff, who is the appellant here, that the judgment of the learned District Judge is vitiated by the irregular admission of fresh evidence in appeal contrary to the provisions of O. XLI, rr. 27 to 29, Civil P. C. It is to be noted that the fresh evidence admitted by the learned District Judge consisted not only of the oral evidence of the Kazi but also of two documents, for the admission of which there is no specific prayer or order or any reason given other than the passage from the judgment just quoted. Order XLI, r. 27, provides for the admission in appeal of documents wrongly rejected by the trial Court—a provision which has no application here—and also provides that further evidence may be admitted if the Appellate Court requires any document to be produced or any witness to be examined to enable it to pronounce judgment or for any other substantial cause. Rule 29, provides that where additional evidence is directed or allowed to be taken the Appellate Court shall specify the points to which the evidence is to be confined and record on its proceedings the point so specified. These provisions have been the subject of many decisions, one of the most authoritative being the case in Parsotim Thakur v. Lal Mohar Thakur (1), where the Judicial Committee lays down the principles which should guide an Appellate Court in admitting or refusing to admit fresh evidence in appeal. Their Lordships point that such evidence can be admitted under cl. (1) (b) of r. 27, only when the Appellate Court requires it or finds it needful. It is also pointed out that the legitimate occasion for the exercise of this discretion is not whenever before the appeal is heard a party applies to adduce fresh evidence, but when, on examining the evidence as it stands, some inherent lacuna or defect becomes apparent. They add that the power so conferred ought to be very sparingly exercised and that one essential requirement is that the new evidence should have a direct and important bearing on a main issue in the case; and they observe that whenever the Appellate Court adopts the procedure laid down under r. 27, it is bound to record its reasons for so doing and under r. 29, must specify the points to which the evidence is to be confined and record on its proceedings the points so specified.

It is, I think, well established that additional evidence can only be admitted in appeal when the Appellate Court itself finds a necessity for the admission of such evidence in order to pronounce a satisfactory judgment and that the power embodied in O. XLI, r. 27 is not a power to give to one party an opportunity to fill up the gaps of a badly prepared case. Prima facie when an essential piece of evidence, obviously necessary for the proof of a party's case and available to that party, has not been adduced in the trial Court, the Appellate Court will not ordinarily allow the production of the missing evidence in appeal, merely because the trial Court has commented adversely on the failure of the party to prove his case as completely as was obviously necessary. If the Court finds that certain missing evidence is necessary to enable it to pronounce judgment, the Court should record an order to that effect and should specify the points to which the evidence is to be confined. The question whether any omission by the Appellate Court to record its reasons and to provide materials showing that the additional evidence is admitted for proper reasons, will vitiate the judgment, must depend to some extent on the circumstances of the case. It is, I think, established that when both parties agree that further evidence is necessary and admission of that evidence is made by consent, any failure on the part of the Judge to record in due form the reasons for the admission of that evidence is not a matter which would justify the reversal of the judgment or the rejection of the additional evidence. So much can be inferred from the observations of the Privy Council in Jagarnath Pershad v. Hanuman Pershad (2) at p. 839. Mr. Kuttikrishna Menon on the strength of one sentence in the same passage has advanced the contention that when there is no objection to the admission of fresh evidence in appeal, the correctness of the admission of that evidence and the regularity of the proceedings admitting it are not matters which can, in second appeal, form a ground for reversing the judgment based on that evidence. The passage in the judgment of the Privy Council on which reliance is placed consists of this :

"It is objected secondly that the admission of the account books on appeal was irregular, but there is nothing to show that the admission was objected to at the time."

The judgment contains no further discussion of this point and though the introductory matter of the report contains extracts from the judgment of the High Court under appeal, it is not clear what were the account books to which their Lordships refer or what were the circumstances in which those account books came to be admitted. It seems to me impossible to treat this brief observation as authority for a rule that in all cases where there is no recorded objection to the admission of evidence in appeal under O. XLI, r. 27 the provisions of r. 27 and the procedure laid down under that rule and under r. 29 can be treated as of no importance. The position on the facts in the present case is that there is no proof either that there was or was not any objection to the admission of this evidence. The probability seems to me from the record in the B diary and the way in which the order on the petition was prepared that the learned District Judge must himself have expressed the opinion in the course of the argument that fresh evidence should be admitted. In such circumstances it may well be that the Counsel for the plaintiff may have considered that no opportunity for objection remained. Now it seems to me that the absence of objection can only be regarded as a factor of importance when in the circumstances it appears to have been equivalent to a consent. In the present case though doubtless the plaintiff's Counsel may have been aware that the learned District Judge had expressed an intention to admit the evidence of the Kazi, we do not know whether this intention was expressed after an objection had been heard and considered or whether no opportunity for objection was allowed. It cannot, I think, be inferred that there was anything in the nature of an acquiescence in or a consent to the taking of further evidence. With reference to the admission of the two additional documents, there is no indication that this was contemplated at the time when the learned Judge permitted the examination of the Kazi. The probability seems to me to be that these two documents went into the record as incidental to the examination of the witness.

Now if the judgment had embodied a statement of the reasons for admitting this additional evidence sufficient to indicate that the learned Judge had applied his mind to the law on the subject and with reference to that law had come to the conclusion that this additional evidence ought to be admitted under the terms of O. XLI, r. 27 (1) (b), it might be contended that the failure to make any contemporaneous record of the reasons for admitting the evidence or of the points to which the evidence was to be confined, though irregular, was not a sufficient ground for rejecting that evidence or reversing the judgment based upon it. But I cannot find any such materials in the judgment of the learned District Judge. The reason which he gives for admitting the evidence of the Kazi is that the Kazi is a most material witness and that his evidence fills up the gaps in the case. The fact that the Kazi was a material witness must have struck anyone responsible for the preparation of the defendants' case and it would appear that there was no practical difficulty about getting the evidence of the Kazi who lives quite near the Court.

I am of opinion that the failure of a party to examine a material witness when that witness is available and the consequent existence of a gap in his case is not ordinarily a sufficient reason for examining that witness in appeal, though there may possibly be circumstances in which such a procedure would be justified, as, for instance, if the whole case was in such a muddle that the Judge was unable to pronounce a satisfactory judgment without further materials.

But it does not seem to me to be right to allow a party to abstain from producing evidence which is obviously necessary, in the hope that if adverse comment is made upon the absence of this evidence, the deficiency can be supplied in appeal. To my mind it is essential to insist that ordinarily a party should prove his case in the trial Court and that it is only in exceptional circumstances for which r. 27 provides that the Court may, if it finds further evidence necessary, permit that evidence to be adduced in appeal. I am therefore, of opinion that the evidence of the Kazi and the two exhibits, namely Exs. 2 (a) and 2 (b), proved through him were wrongly admitted. As the judgment of the learned District Judge has been largely influenced by that evidence, the appeal must be allowed and remanded for fresh disposal by the learned District Judge on the materials available excluding this additional evidence. Costs throughout will abide by the result. Leave to appeal is refused.

SIND CHIEF COURT

Criminal Reference No. 294 of 1940

DAVIS, C. J. AND TYABJI, J.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

SHIVBUX AMRO—ACCUSED

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 75—Case falling under s. 75—Trial under s. 260, Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), if bad—S. 75, whether creates separate offence—S. 75 not to be applied to case but previous convictions to be taken into account—Summary trial is not appropriate—Court can take into consideration previous convictions apart from s. 75.

While the circumstances of a case where s. 75, I. P. C., can be applied make it desirable that the offence should not be tried in a summary way and that in such cases if the trial has started in a summary way the provisions of sub-s. (2) of s. 260, Criminal P. C., should be followed, nevertheless it cannot be said that a trial in which a charge under s. 75, could be framed is necessarily bad in law because the offence is tried summarily. It may, indeed, almost always be inexpedient in the interests of justice to do so, but s. 75, is an enabling section and merely applies a principle; it does not create a separate offence or indeed, an offence at all and hence the question whether s. 260, Criminal P. C., applies to offences under s. 75, does not arise.

A trial in a summary way is not an appropriate procedure when s. 75, is to be applied. Nor, indeed, would it be an appropriate procedure when s. 75, is not to be applied, but previous convictions are to be taken into account in determining what punishment within his ordinary powers a Magistrate should impose because of the limited nature of the sentence which may be passed under s. 262, Criminal P. C.

Previous convictions can however, be taken into account under s. 14, Evi. Act even when s. 75, I. P. C., is not to be applied. After an accused has been convicted and before sentence is passed a Court can for the purpose of deciding what sentence should be passed, take into consideration previous convictions, any question of s. 75, apart. 26 Ind. Cas. 995 (1), explained.

Cr. Ref. made by the Additional Sessions Judge, Nawabshah, dated September 27, 1940.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Davis, C. J.—This is a reference by the Additional Sessions Judge of Nawabshah, recommending that the conviction of one Shivbux for theft of silver head-dresses from idols in a temple and a sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 50 passed by the Resident Magistrate of Tando Adam, should be set aside and a re-trial ordered, on the ground that the accused had one previous conviction had sentence of one month's rigorous imprisonment, that this was a case in which s. 75, I. P. C., should be applied, and that the Magistrate could not try this case as he did, in a summary way, for s. 260, Criminal P. C., would not apply, and the trial was therefore void under s. 530 (q), Criminal P. C.

Now, so far as the application of s. 260, Criminal P. C., is concerned, we are of the opinion that while the circumstances of a case where s. 75, I. P. C., can be applied make it desirable that the offence should not be tried in a summary way and that in such cases if the trial has started in a summary way the provisions of sub s. (2) of s. 260, Criminal P. C., should be followed, nevertheless we do not think it can be said that a trial in which a charge under s. 75, I. P. C., could be framed is necessarily bad in law because the offence is tried summarily. It may, indeed, almost always be inexpedient in the interests of justice to do so, but s. 75, I. P. C., merely applies a principle; it does not create a separate offence. It is an enabling section and provides that when accused persons are convicted of certain offences and have previous convictions they can be sentenced to enhanced punishment by the application of s. 75, I. P. C. As s. 75, I. P. C., does not create a separate offence or indeed, an offence at all, it matters not that s. 260, Criminal P. C., is limited to certain offences. There is no offence under s. 75, I. P. C. There is no question then of s. 260, Criminal

P. C., applying or not applying to offences under s. 75, I. P. C. On the other hand, there may always be other considerations which prevent the trial in a summary way of offences to which s. 75, I. P. C., is to be applied. The Criminal P. C., provides a special procedure for the trial of offences when s. 75 is to be applied. Sections 221 and 255A, Criminal P. C., regulate the procedure at a trial by a Magistrate when s. 75, I. P. C., is to be applied. Section 310, Criminal P. C., regulates the procedure in a trial by a Sessions Court when previous convictions are to be proved for the purpose of enhancing sentence whether under s. 75, I. P. C., or any other special law, such for instance, as the Criminal Tribes Act.

It is therefore clear that trial in a summary way is not an appropriate procedure when s. 75, I. P. C., is to be applied. Nor, indeed, would it appear an appropriate procedure when s. 75, I. P. C., is not to be applied, but previous convictions are to be taken into account in determining what punishment within his ordinary powers a Magistrate should impose because of the limited nature of the sentence which may be passed under s. 262, Criminal P. C. It is to be remembered that previous convictions can be taken into account even when s. 75, I. P. C., is not to be applied. After an accused has been convicted and before sentence is passed a Court can for the purpose of deciding what sentence should be passed, take into consideration previous convictions, any question of s. 75, I. P. C., apart. In the Bombay case in Emperor v. Ismail Ali (1), there is some discussion as to the section of the Evi. Act, if any, which applies to a case where previous convictions are to be taken into account for the purpose of deciding the punishment to be imposed, the punishment being within the ordinary powers of the Magistrate. Shah, J. points out the distinction between bad character within the meaning of s. 54, Evi. Act, and a previous conviction. Heaton, J. was of the opinion that s. 54, Evi. Act, did not apply to such a case and that previous convictions in such a case were within the sphere of penology rather than of law. Neither of the learned Judges referred to s. 14, Evi. Act, which would appear to be the appropriate section.

While therefore it would appear to us that in this case it was unnecessary to apply the provisions of s. 75, I. P. C., we consider that in view of the accused's previous conviction, and the circumstances of this case the Magistrate could not adequately punish the accused in a trial held in a summary way and that he should have tried the case in a long trial and before sentence, have taken into consideration the previous conviction of the accused when deciding what sentence should be imposed. It would appear that the Magistrate within his ordinary powers of a First Class Magistrate without the assistance of s. 75, I. P. C., could have adequately punished the accused. We therefore accept the reference, set aside the conviction and sentence and order the accused to be re-tried according to law.

SECRETARY OF STATE—DEFENDANT

Madras Motor Vehicles Taxation Act (III of 1931), s. 2 (iii)—Steam roller, if "motor vehicles"—Interpretation of Statutes—Same rule apply to all statutes—Taxing statute cannot be differently construed.

Steam rollers are motor vehicles within the meaning of s. 2, Mad. Motor Vehicles Taxation Act. Smith and Sons v. Pickering (1), relied on.

[Case-law referred to.]

If a statute purports to impose a tax, the intention so to do must be shown by clear and unambiguous language, but the same rules of construction apply to all statutes and a taxing statute cannot be differently construed. Att.-General v. Carlton Bank (5), relied on. [p. 823, col. 1.]

Mr. A. Suryanarayanan, for the Plaintiff.

Sir A. Krishnaswami Ayyar (Advocate-General) and Mr. R. Ramamurthy, for the Defendant.

Judgment.—The plaintiff, the Corporation of Madras, was the owner of 21 steam rollers which were used in connexion with the discharge of the duty of making, repairing and maintaining roads within the City. Acting through the Commissioner of Police the defendant (hereinafter called "the Local Govt.") required the plaintiff to pay the sum of Rs. 16,170 as the amount of tax alleged to be leviable upon these steam rollers under the provisions of the Madras Motor Vehicles Taxation Act, 1931 (hereinafter called "the Local Act") for the period from April 1, 1931 to April 30, 1934. The plaintiff contended that these rollers were not motor vehicles within the meaning of the Local Act and that no tax was leviable upon them. Correspondence took place between the plaintiff and the Local Govt. eventuating in 1936 by a letter addressed to the Corporation informing it that if payment of the sum of Rs. 16,170 was not made the Local Govt. would adjust this sum by an equivalent deduction from the grants payable to the plaintiff during that year. Thereupon, on March 30, 1936, the plaintiff paid the above sum under protest: see Exs. P-1, P-2. On August 14, 1936 by Ex. P-4 the plaintiff claimed repayment of the above amount and gave notice of the intention to file the present suit. This demand not having met with compliance, this suit was filed on December 14, 1936. The plaintiff claims: (a) a declaration that no tax is leviable upon the steam rollers under the provisions of the Local Act; (b) a decree for the sum of Rs. 16,170 and (c) interest upon that sum at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from March 30, 1936, the date when payment was made to the Local Govt.

The defendant in his written statement alleges that the tax is leviable on the steam rollers under the provisions of the Local Act and denies that in any event the plaintiff is entitled to recover interest. No tax upon the plaintiff's steam rollers has been demanded or paid for the period following April 30, 1934 as under s. 11 (1) (ii), Local Act, the Local Govt. may by notification make an exemption in regard to the tax payable in respect of any motor vehicle or class of motor vehicles and pursuant to this provision road rollers belonging to the Govt. or Local Govt. bodies were exempted from payment of tax after the above date. No oral evidence was given and the facts to which I refer are agreed between the parties. If a steam roller is a motor vehicle within the meaning of the Local Act, the tax was properly leviable, and the plaintiff cannot succeed. On the other hand if "motor vehicle" under the Act does not include a steam roller the plaintiff was wrongly charged with the tax and is entitled to a decree for the amount paid. There is no dispute in regard to the amount of the claim. It is conceded by the plaintiff that if the tax was payable under the Act, the sum of Rs. 16,170 is the correct amount and the learned Advocate-General on behalf of the defendant conceded that if steam rollers were not taxable, then the above sum is a debt due and recoverable by the plaintiff from the defendant. The relevant provisions of the Local Act are:

"Section 2 (iii) 'motor vehicle' has the same meaning as in the Motor Vehicles Act, 1914.

Section 4 (1). The Local Govt. may...direct that a tax shall be levied on every motor vehicle kept or used in the presidency of Madras."

Section 2, Motor Vehicles Act, 1914, (hereinafter called the "the Imperial Act") provides that a "motor vehicle" includes a vehicle, carriage or other means of conveyance propelled or which may be propelled on a road by electrical or mechanical power either entirely or partially."

Mr. Vajayarághavan in the course of his able argument on behalf of the plaintiff, contended that a steam roller is not included in the definition of 'Motor Vehicle' in the Imperial Act and consequently is excluded from the Local Act, and further that even if included in the definition in the Imperial Act, it is excluded from the Local Act which is a taxing or revenue statute, the object of which is different to that of the Imperial Act, and its provisions must be construed differently or at least more strictly than other legislation. Except in the respect mentioned below, no question arises that a steam roller fulfils the requirements of the definition in s. 2, Imperial Act. It is necessary in the first instance to consider whether a steam roller is 'motor vehicle' within the meaning of that statute.

It was contended that the words in the Imperial Act 'vehicle,' 'carriage' and 'other means of conveyance' must be read ejusdem generis and consequently, a vehicle which is not used or construed for the purpose of conveying passengers or goods, is not a vehicle within the definition, a steam roller being used solely for the purpose of making, repairing and maintaining roads and is not a means of conveyance. In Shortt's Dictionary a vehicle is defined as "a means of conveyance on wheels or runners used for the carriage of persons or goods." A steam roller has three wheels, a wide one in front and two narrower wheels at the rear (which are usually wider than wheels of vehicles). These wheels are of heavy manufacture and when the roller is employed in road making are used as the rollers. When it moves from place to place and in order to progress, these wheels fulfil the ordinary functions as such, and they are no less wheels because another purpose is fulfilled by them. A steam roller is one inseparable implement with a large superstructure containing its machinery and driver's cab and it travels on a road by means of its wheels.

In Smith and Sons v. Pickering (1) the question was whether a heavy threshing machine and a straw trusser or presser, each travelling on four wheels, were included in s. 17 (1), Locomotives Act, 1898, which defines a 'wagon' as including "any truck, cart, carriage or other vehicle." Scrutton, J., as he then was, in his judgment pointed out that the words "any truck, cart, carriage or other vehicle" would seem to imply that a wagon must be constructed to carry something and if not so constructed there was support in some provisions of the Locomotives Act for the contention that it was not a 'wagon,' but if it were not regarded as a wagon, other provisions in the Act for the public safety would be inapplicable, and at p. 331*, he said:

"I come to the conclusion that it is not necessary to read into the meaning of the word 'wagon' any condition that the particular structure shall be capable of carrying any load other than itself. I see no reason why a heavy superstructure upon wheels should not be described as a vehicle."

If a steam roller were not included in the definition 'of motor vehicle' in s. 2, Imperial Act, then the provisions of ss. 3, 4 and 5 in Part 2 and ss. 16 and 17 in Part 5 of the Statute would not apply to it. These sections forbid a person under 18 years of age from driving a motor vehicle, require the driver to stop when directed by a Police Officer and others specified so to do, make it an offence to drive recklessly, specify the tribunal by which offences are triable and the punishment. The Legislature could not have intended, for example, to exempt a driver of a steam roller from any penalty, although he was guilty of driving to the danger of the public or refusing to stop when required in the interests of public safety. In Dennis v. Leonard (2), an "Austin" motor tractor was held to be a vehicle. This is an implement upon which the driver rides and is used for the purpose of towing or pulling. Avory, J., in his judgment at p. 96† points out that it was available for the purpose of carrying a person upon it. This must of course be the driver. In Taylor v. Goodwing (3), a bicycle was held to be a vehicle or carriage within s. 78, Highway Act, 1835, which prohibits the furious driving of any carriage, and it would seem that in that case the words "carriage" and "vehicle" were considered to be correlative terms. That decision was followed in Emperor v. Kikha- bhai (4). A steam roller is propelled on a road by mechanical power, it conveys the driver, and if he has one, also his assistant. Without the former, it could not travel.

With respect, I agree with the opinion of Scrutton, L. J., in Smith and Sons v. Pickering (1), that a heavy superstructure upon wheels is a vehicle, and it must follow that if it propels itself by mechanical power, it is a motor vehicle. Whether a steam roller is kept or used by a private person, firm or company or by a local authority, there can be no difference as to its nature. I cannot think that it was intended by the Legislature that a private person who is the owner of a steam roller used for road making could send it upon a highway to travel in any town or other part of the country and the driver should not be liable for the consequences of infringements of the provisions in the Act enacted for the purpose of public safety. In my view, a steam roller is a motor vehicle within the meaning of the definition in s. 2, Imperial Act. It is to be noticed that under s. 13 of this Act the Governor in Council by order dated November 29, 1916 exempted road rollers from the operation of Part 3 of the Act, which deals with licensing and control of motor vehicles. If a steam roller is not a motor vehicle within the meaning of the Act, then it could not be exempted from its provisions as they would otherwise be inapplicable.

Section 2 (iii), Local Act expressly provides that a "motor vehicle" has the same meaning as in the Imperial Act. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that as the object of the Local Act was, as set out in the Preamble, to abolish the levy of taxes on motor vehicles by local bodies and to provide for the levy of a provincial tax, and by s. 10 (1), from the proceeds of the tax, the Local Govt. shall pay to each local body such sum as represents the average annual income in tolls or taxes theretofore levied, that the Local Act was revenue legislation and consequently the meaning of "motor vehicle" is different to that in the Imperial Act, and the legislation being of a revenue nature, the same principles of construction do not apply. I do not agree with this contention. Whilst undoubtedly if a statute purports to impose a tax, the intention so to do must be shown by clear and unambiguous language, but the same rules of construction apply to all statutes. In Att.-General v. Carlton Bank (5), Lord Russel, C. J., at (4) 41 B 464; 40 Ind. Cas. 289; 19 Bom. L. R. 18 Cr. L. J. 641.

"I see no reason why any special canons of construction should be applied to any Act of Parliament, and I know of no authority for saying that a taxing Act is to be construed differently from any other Act. The duty of the Court is, in my opinion, in all cases the same, whether the Act is to be construed relates to taxation or to any other subject, viz., to give effect to the intention of the Legislature, as that intention is to be gathered from the language employed, having regard to the context in connexion with which it is employed. The Court must no doubt ascertain the subject-matter to which the particular tax is by the statute intended to be applied, but when once that is ascertained, it is not open to the Court to narrow or whittle down the operation of the Act by considerations of hardship or business convenience, or the like."

The wording of s. 2 of the Local Act, is clear and expressive and provides that a motor vehicle within that statute shall have the same meaning as in the Imperial Act. It must follow, in my opinion, that a motor vehicle within the meaning of the Imperial Act must also be a motor vehicle within the contemplation of the Local Act. It would seem that the plaintiff Corporation is impressed with the position that prior to the passing of the Local Act, the Corporation was the authority which imposed a tax upon motor vehicles and after it came into force it was unable to accept the new position that its own vehicles were liable to taxation. I hold that the plaintiff's steam rollers are motor vehicles within the meaning of s. 2 of the Local Act and were liable to the taxation imposed upon them by the Local Govt. In the light of the conclusion to which I have arrived, it is not necessary to consider at length the arguments which have been addressed to me upon the question of interest upon the amount of the claim. The learned Advocate-General conceded that if the Corporation succeeded in recovering the sum of Rs. 16,170 it would also be entitled to interest upon that amount from August 14, 1934, the date when the demand was made for repayment. I desire merely to express shortly that in my view the plaintiff is not entitled to interest prior to the above date. The sum claimed is not a debt payable by virtue of any written instrument at a certain time and interest would, therefore, commence to accrue from the date when written notice of demand was given as provided by s. 1, Interest Act, 1839. There will be a decree, therefore, in favour of the defendant and for the costs. (Certificate for Counsel.)

Order accordingly.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 32 (5), 35—Entry by father in his pocket book regarding birth of his son proved to be in his handwriting—Fact that they saw his handwriting long ago, whether shakes value of their evidence—Entry in school register regarding age, admissibility of—Minor—Contract—Minor representing to be major entering into contract—Contract, validity of—Whether can be compelled to refund money received by minor.

Where entry by father in his pocket book regarding the births of his various sons which is relevant under the provisions of s. 32 (5) is proved to be in his handwriting by witnesses acquainted with his handwriting in their official capacity, the fact that it is very long time since any of them saw his handwriting would not shake the value of the evidence which they have given.

There is a presumption that when the boy is admitted into the school he was accompanied by some close relative of his who must have been aware of his age. The entry regarding the age of the boy in the school register is, therefore, admissible.

Where a minor representing to be a major has entered into a contract, the contract is void and unenforceable against the minor. The minor cannot even be compelled to refund the money received by him under the contract. 170 Ind. Cas. 934 (4), approved, 111 Ind. Cas. 175 (2), dissented from.

F. A. against the order and decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Peshawar, dated October 26, 1938.

Messrs. L. Ram Labhaya and L. Wazirchand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Abdul Latif, for the Respondents.

Almond, J. C.—This is an appeal against the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Peshawar dismissing the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff Kalaram sued the defendant Fazal Bari for recovery of Rs. 5,000, principal and Rs. 5,000, interest or rent on the basis of a mortgage deed executed by Fazal Bari on January 5, 1930. The defendant Fazal Bari has died during the pendency of this appeal and his representatives have been brought on the file. The defence of the defendant was that he was a minor at the time of the execution of the mortgage deed which therefore could not be enforced against him. He also denied the execution of the deed. The following issues were framed by the trial Court:

"1. Did the defendant execute the mortgage deed in question?

2. If so, was the defendant minor at the time of the execution of the deed and is therefore not liable?

3. Did the defendant pay Rs. 500 on account of interest, and if so, what is its effect?

4. What is the defendant's share in the property in suit?

5. To what relief is the plaintiff entitled?"

The trial Court found that the mortgage deed had been executed by the defendant, that he was a minor at the time of its execution, that he did not make any false representation as to his age and therefore the plaintiff was entitled to no relief. In the appeal before us learned Counsel has not contested the finding on the question of the execution of the document. He has however made the following points: 1. That it is not proved that the defendant was a minor at the time of the execution of the deed. 2. That he did make a false representation as to his age to the plaintiff, and 3. That if the first point is found against him and the second in his favour he is entitled to restitution of the original sum of Rs. 5,000 advanced. These are the three points for decision in this case.

As regards the question of the age of the defendant the evidence is based entirely on entries in certain documents. The first of these is made in a pocket book which is said to have belonged to the minor's father Juma Khan who was in service in Baluchistan in 1912 when the defendant is said to have been born. The father is said to have made the entries in this book regarding the births of his various sons and the birth of the defendant is shown to have taken place on April 3, 1912. To prove that this entry which is relevant under the provisions of s. 32 (5), Evi. Act, was in the handwriting of the defendant's father one witness M. Sadulla Jan, a Pleader, was examined at the trial and two others who are senior E. A. Cs in Baluchistan were examined on commission. All these three witnesses state that they served under the defendant's father in Baluchistan and thus became acquainted with his handwriting in their official capacity. They express the opinion that the entry in dispute is in the handwriting of Juma Khan. These three witnesses are entirely independent and there is no reason for doubting the opinion which they have expressed. The only criticism which learned Counsel for the appellant can make on their evidence is that it is a very long time since any of them saw the handwriting of Juma Khan, but that would not in our opinion shake the value of the evidence which they have given.

The other piece of documentary evidence relates to entries in documents at schools which the defendant attended. He first attended the Islamia High School in Peshawar where he was admitted in 1919 and the admission register shows his date of birth as April 3, 1912. He went into the Edwards High School in 1922 where his birth was again shown as April 3, 1912. An entrance form for the school-leaving certificate was sent by the latter school to the Punjab University and was proved by an official of the University. In that application the date of birth is also given as April 3, 1912. Learned Counsel has contended in connection with these entries in the school registers which are admissible under s. 35, Evi. Act; that they can have little value in view of the fact that we are in the dark as to the persons who caused the entries to be made. There is a presumption however that when the boy was admitted into the school he was accompanied by some close relative of his who must have been aware of his age. All these entries in the various documents were made long before the present dispute arose and when there was no occasion to forge the age of the boy. There is also a further entry in the service book of the defendant kept by Govt. for he entered Govt. service after leaving school and his date of birth is also given there as April 3, 1912. On these facts we agree with the learned trial Judge that the defendant was a minor at the time of the execution of the document.

We now turn to the second point, namely, whether the defendant made a false representation as to his age at the time of the execution of the document. The document was written on January 5, 1930, by Waishnu Das a deed-writer. He says that at the time he wrote it there was no mention in it of the age of the defendant. The document was registered on January 8, and bears an interlineation giving the age of the defendant as 22 years. The defendant denies that he made this addition with his own hand, though he admits that he initialled the addition and says that he did so at the instigation of his step-brother Mohd. Sadiq, who has been traceless for the last five years. Lalchand; P. W. No. 5, the broker who arranged this contract, says that he was present at the time the deed was registered and that the addition regarding the age of the defendant was made by the defendant in his own hand at the instance of the Sub-Registrar. This witness Lalchand is an independent witness and his evidence appears to us to be in accordance with the probabilities of the case. Sub-Registrar before registering a document are required to satisfy themselves that an executant is not a minor and it seems to have been for this reason that the addition was made. The learned trial Judge was of opinion that as this fact was established, the plaintiff should therefore have been put on his guard as regards the age of the defendant and that as he took no steps to inquire about the real age of the defendant, he could not have been misled by the statement of the defendant as to his age. We are of opinion that there was a definite misrepresentation by the defendant as to his age. He stated that he was 22 years old. The plaintiff had no means of ascertaining the correctness of this and we think that it was on the basis of this representation of the defendant that the money was then advanced.

There remains the last legal point. Learned Counsel concedes that in view of the decisions of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (1), the contract between the plaintiff and the defendant is void and is unenforceable. It is also conceded that in view of the decisions of all the High Courts in India the defendant is not estopped from pleading his minority under the provisions of s. 115, Evi. Act. He contends however that the plaintiff is entitled to restitution of the sum of Rs. 5,000 which he advanced under this contract. There is a violent conflict of opinion on this point between the High Courts in India. The case on which the appellant relies is a judgment of a Full Bench of the Lahore High Court in Khan Gul v. Lakha Singh (2). The decision in that case was given by a Bench of five Judges out of whom four were of opinion that in circumstances like the present case the minor defendant could be compelled to restore the money which he received under the contract: one Judge dissented from this view and held that the minor could not be compelled to restore the money which he had received. That judgment was followed by a Single Judge of the Calcutta High Court in Manmatha Kumar Saha v. Exchange Loan Co. Ltd. (3). The opposite view was taken by the Allahabad High Court in Ajudhia Prasad v. Chandan Lal (4). That case was decided by three Judges who after considering the Lahore case all came to the conclusion that the minor defendant could not be compelled to restore money which he had received under the contract. The law on the subject has been discussed in extreme detail in all these three judgments and nothing can be added to the arguments which have been set forth in them. It only remains to be said that we consider that the view of the Allahabad High Court is the correct one. To hold otherwise would, in our opinion, be to evade the provisions of the Contract Act as interpreted by the Privy Council in Mohori Bibee v. Dhamodas Ghose (1). The following passage in the Allahabad case appears to us to be particularly pertinent :

"To pass a decree against a minor enforcing his pecuniary liability would while holding that the contract is void and unenforceable, at the same time be passing a decree against him on the footing that he had entered into the contract and has not carried out its terms. There is no rule of equity, justice and good conscience which entitles a Court to enforce a void contract of a minor under the cloak of equitable doctrine."

There were remarks to a similar effect by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the Calcutta case referred to. They cited with approval a dictum of Romer, L. J. given in an English case to the following effect :

"The short answer is that a Court of equity cannot say that it is equitable to compel a person to pay any moneys in respect of a transaction which as against that person the Legislature has declared to be void."

We are therefore of opinion that the decision of the Court below is correct though on different grounds. We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs. Pleadar's fee Rs. 150.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Appeals Nos. 146 to 148 of 1938

ABDUR RAHMAN, J.

P. L. S. S. RAMANATHAN CHETTIAR

AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

versus

K. M. V. V. KUMARAPPA CHETTIAR—

RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 7 (1)—Agreement or compromise by guardian on behalf of minor without leave of Court, whether voidable against all parties at minor's option—Guardian agreeing to refer matter in suit to arbitration, if can question legality of reference and award in suit and in appeal—Principle and Agent—Power-of-attorney—Authority to adjust matters—Whether includes power to refer to arbitration.

If a guardian in spite of the prohibition, contained in r. 7 (1) of O. XXXII, Civil P. C., enters into an agreement or a compromise on behalf of a minor, without obtaining leave of the Court it would be voidable against all the parties and presumably not at their option but at the option of the minor. It is therefore the minor alone who can be held entitled to resile from the agreement or compromise, if he may choose it fit to do so, either on attaining majority or even before through his next friend or guardian. The sub-cl. (1) only contemplates two parties one of which is the minor and the other persons who have entered into a contract with the minor through his guardian. As between these two parties the contract is stated to be voidable against them and not at their option. 34 Ind. Cas. 213 (9), relied on. [p. 828, col. 1.]

Obiter.—The question of legality of reference and that of an award can be raised on behalf of the minors by the same guardians who had agreed to refer the matter to arbitration both in the suit and even in the appeal. 130 Ind. Cas. 209 (7) and 149 Ind. Cas. 778 (8), not approved. [p. 827, col. 2.]

Where a power-of-attorney authorises the agent to adjust a matter, the power does not include a power to refer the matter to arbitration on the principle underlying the maxim delagata potestas non potest delegari.

A. against an order of the Sub-Judge, Sivaganga, dated October 16, 1937.

Babu Sitarama Rao and Mr. V. Ramaswami Ayyar, for the Appellants.

The Advocate General, Messrs. R. Ramamurthi Iyer and C. Somasundaram Chettiar, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—These appeals arise out of an order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Sivaganga on two applications, one made on behalf of the plaintiff and the other on behalf of the defendants under O. XXIII, r. 3, Civil P. C., with the allegations that the parties had referred the matter in suit, which was one for dissolution of partnership and accounts, to two arbitrations which resulted in two awards. The earlier which held the plaintiff to be entitled to recover Rs. 30,000 was pleaded on behalf of the defendants and the later under which the defendants were found to be liable to the extent of Rs. 52,000 was pleaded by the plaintiff. Since it has been settled by a Full Bench of this Court in Subbaraju v. Venkataramaraju (1), that where in a suit parties have referred their difference to arbitration without an order of the Court and an award is made, a decree in terms of the award can be passed by the Court under O. XXIII, r. 3, Civil P. C., the only question for decision in this case is whether the subject-matter of the suit had been so adjusted between the parties. It was asserted on behalf of the plaintiff that, although the matter was referred to a private arbitration for the first time in 1935, the award given by the arbitrators was invalid and as the plaintiff was not satisfied with it, the subject-matter of the suit along with the question of the validity of the first award were referred to a second arbitration by the parties on April 2, 1936 and resulted in the award Ex. A, under which the plaintiff was entitled to get a sum of Rs. 52,000, instead of Rs. 30,000 as ordered in the previous arbitration. It was also alleged that the defendants had accepted the later award, signed it in token of their acceptance, executed four hundis for the amount to which the plaintiff was found to be entitled by the arbitrators and delivered them to the plaintiff. He therefore applied to the Court for the adjustment and satisfaction to be recorded and the suit to be dismissed.

Various objections were raised by the defendants to this award although the factum of reference and the existence of a second award were not denied. No evidence was however let in on their behalf to substantiate their contentions and the learned Counsel for the appellants has therefore confined himself to certain legal objections which have to be determined in these appeals. I might state at once that in view of the plaintiff's application, it would be unnecessary to consider the award or adjustment relied upon by the defendants in their application (I. A. No. 414 of 1935) unless I come to the conclusion that in view of the legal objections stressed on behalf of the defendants the second award and satisfaction urged on behalf of the plaintiff could not be sustained. If I arrive, on the other hand, at a finding that the satisfaction pleaded on behalf of the plaintiff was unassailable, the first award or adjustment must be taken to have been superseded by the later award and satisfaction.

The first legal objection raised on behalf of the defendants is that inasmuch as there were minors who were also defendants in the suit, the matter in dispute could not have been referred to arbitration or compromise under the provisions of O. XXXII, r. 7, Civil P. C., without the leave of the Court. There is considerable force in this objection so far as it goes. No application appears to have been made to the Court in which the suit was pending for leave to refer the matter to arbitration on behalf of the minors. Even after the award was made, the guardian ad litem made no application to the Court for granting him leave to compromise the matter in suit. In the absence of any application for leave, the Court was not and could not have been called upon to consider whether the compromise was beneficial to the minors and the compromise could not therefore be forced on the minors even if the Court happened to consider it to be beneficial in their interest: see Ranga Rao v. Rajagopala Raju (2), Gulab Dei v. Vaish Motor Co. Etawah (3), Veerappa Chettiar v. Veluswami Thevar, 146 Ind. Cas. 707 (4), Hemangini Dasi v. Bhagwati Sundari Dasi (5) and In re Birchall, Wilson v. Birchall (6). The learned Advocate-General who appeared for the respondent did not oppose this contention seriously, although it was argued by him that this objection might not be available to the same guardian who had agreed to refer the suit to arbitration. He relied on certain observations made in Golnuri Bibi v. Abdus Samad (7), at p. 645 and Chennakesavulu v. Veerasami (8), in that connection. The case in Chennakesavulu v. Veerasami (8), is by a single Judge of this Court and simply follows the Calcutta case. The learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court had held that if some guardians who had agreed to refer the matter to arbitration subsequently turned round after the award was made and wished to appeal against the decree passed in terms of the award, they would not be entitled to do so as the decree passed on that basis was not void but voidable at the option of the minor and that no other party could call it in question except the minor either on attaining majority or before then through another next friend.

The question before me does not relate to the competency of the appeal. Nor have I been called upon in this case to consider the validity of the reference made by the guardian on behalf of the minors without the leave of the Court, as it appears from the application presented on behalf of the plaintiff that the matter was referred to arbitration only by defendants Nos. 2 and 4 for themselves and by defendant No. 2 on behalf of defendant No. 3 as his agent, and there is no reference to the minors either in the application or in the award Ex. A which is on the record. If it were not so, I feel with great deference to the learned Judges who decided the Calcutta case that the question of legality of reference and that of an award could be raised on behalf of the minors by the same guardians both in the suit and even in the appeal: but as there is no necessity to decide the point here, it is unnecessary to examine the question in any detail. In the absence of any reference to the minors in the award, the lower Court's finding that they (the minors) would be bound by the award unless they got it set aside must be held to be incorrect and is therefore set aside.

It has however been contended that in view of sub-cl. (2) of O. XXXII, r. 7, which declares an agreement of reference and even a compromise entered into without the leave of the Court not only void as against minors but also voidable against all the parties to the suit and since the defendants have expressed themselves unequivocally by pleading the defence that they were not bound by the compromise, it should be held to be wholly ineffectual. It is quite true that the words employed in sub-cl. (2) are capable of this construction but the interpretation which I have been asked to put on them is, in my opinion, unreasonable and should not be accepted. The whole object of enacting this rule was that a next friend or a guardian should not enter into any agreement in regard to the subject-matter of the suit or compromise without the leave of the Court. This Rule is undoubtedly wholesome. Sub-cl. (2) was merely providing the penalty when the next friend or guardian acted in contravention of the provisions of sub-cl. (1). If a guardian did in spite of this prohibition, enter into an agreement or a compromise on behalf of a minor, without obtaining such leave they would be voidable against all the parties and presumably not at their option but at the option of the minors. The use of the word 'against' in this sub-clause is important and must not be overlooked. It could not have been the intention of the Legislature to have given this option to the very persons who may enter into an agreement or a compromise in contravention of the rule with a next friend or a guardian of a minor. They must be presumed to have knowledge that they were dealing with a minor's guardian who has had no leave from the Court and cannot be permitted to take advantage of the situation if they find that an arbitrator has gone against them or that a compromise appeared subsequently to be more detrimental than what they thought it would be in the beginning. It is only the minor who is unable to guard his own interests and has to depend upon the bona fides and vigilance of other persons.

It is therefore the minor alone who can be held entitled to resile from the agreement or compromise, if he may choose it fit to do so, either on attaining majority or even before through his next friend or guardian. The sub-cl. (1) only contemplates two parties one of which is the minor and the other persons who have entered into a contract with the minor through his guardian. As between these two parties the contract is stated to be voidable against them and not at their option. This interpretation can be supported by a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Jamna Bai v. Vasant Rao (9), where a bond executed as a part of a compromise of a suit jointly on behalf of a minor and by another was held to be unenforceable against the minor but this fact did not absolve the other executant from her obligations under the bond. The agreement of reference or compromise would have been in this particular case voidable at the option of the minors if they were parties to the agreement but as stated above the reference and the compromise were by adult defendants alone and the minors were no parties to either. There is thus no force in the contention that the compromise should be held to be of no force against the other defendants if it was found to be not binding on the minors.

The second question which has been raised by the learned Counsel for the appellant is that defendant No. 2 was not authorized on behalf of defendant No. 3 to refer the matter to arbitration. The plaintiff on the other hand placed his reliance on the power-of-attorney executed by defendant No. 3 in favour of defendant No. 2 (Ex. 2). Mr. Sitarama Rao contends however that the power-of-attorney has to be construed strictly and must be examined with care in order to ascertain whether the act done by the agent was fairly within the scope of his authority. This is correct and bearing this rule of construction in mind I would have to examine the document. A reference to the power-of-attorney shows that defendant No. 3 had authorized defendant No. 2 to settle, liquidate or adjust all accounts existing between the defendants and any other person. There was no power authorizing defendant No. 2 to refer the matter to arbitration. Moreover, the words used in the power-of-attorney indicate that authority was being given to defendant No. 2 to adjust, and the authority could not therefore in the absence of any other words to the contrary in the power-of-attorney, be delegated on the principle underlying the naxim delegata potestas non potest delegari. It is quite legitimate for a principal to expect that if he gives the power to an agent to adjust, the agent would exercise his own judgment in the matter and not agree to be bound by the judgment of some one else whom the principle did not know. The learned Advocate-General however urged that the power to adjust expressly granted should include the power to refer to arbitration as it was necessary for accomplishing the object for which the power was granted expressly. It was also argued that business could not be conducted without the existence of this power and defendant No. 2 should therefore be held to be bound by the award. I am not satisfied in the present case that the claim could not have been adjusted otherwise than by referring the dispute to arbitration. Nor was I struck by the second reason given by the learned Advocate-General. I do not agree that the business could not have been conducted without the existence of this power. I would therefore agree with the contention raised by the learned Counsel for the appellant that defendant No. 3 would not, in the circumstances, be bound by the reference to arbitration entered into by defendant No. 2 on his behalf.

The objections raised on behalf of the other defendants Nos. 2 and 4 however stand on a different footing. They had not only referred the matter to arbitration but also signed the award in token of acceptance and cannot now be permitted to pick holes in it. The plea of coercion or undue influence raised on their behalf was not even substantiated by them. It must be remembered that we are dealing with Nattukottai Chetties in this case. The plaintiff is much younger in age than defendant No. 2 and it is extremely unlikely that he might have been able to exercise the pressure on defendants Nos. 2 and 4 which has been imputed to him. The allegation that the defendants were not capable of understanding the nature of the document they were signing is almost inconceivable. Moreover, after the award was pronounced by the arbitrator, defendant No. 2 executed four hundis for no less than a sum of Rs. 52,000 in accordance with their decision and delivered them to the plaintiff. They cannot now be heard to say that the reference and the award were invalid and not binding on them or that the dispute between the parties had not been adjusted. The case might have presented some difficulty if the plaintiff had not agreed to be bound by the settlement in case defendant

No. 3 was not found to have authorized defendant No. 2, as held by me already to refer the matter to arbitration; but since he had accepted the hundis executed by defendant No. 2 in full satisfaction of his claim it may be taken that he hoped to be able to recover the amount due from defendant No. 2. The learned Advocate-General also indicated during his arguments that even if I came to an adverse finding in regard to his contention about defendant No. 3, his client would nevertheless be willing to press his application for adjustment and satisfaction to be recorded and the suit dismissed in consequence.

I have already held that the later award has not been shown to be invalid and is binding on defendants Nos. 2 and 4. Moreover, it was not only accepted by them but in pursuance of it four hundis were executed and delivered by defendant No. 2 to the plaintiff. It has thus passed beyond the domain of an award. The first award which formed the subject of the application presented by the defendants need not therefore be considered and must be found to have been superseded. The suit for dissolution and accounts must for the above reasons be held to have been satisfied. The result is that these appeals must be dismissed. But in view of the fact that the lower Court's finding in regard to the minors and in regard to defendant No. 3 has not been upheld, the proper order in regard to costs appears to be that the parties should bear their own in this Court.

HENDERSON AND SEN, JJ.

PETITIONER

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476—Magistrate trying case issuing warrants for arrest—Constable entrusted for their execution giving false information of certain offence for explaining his failure to execute them—Offence committed by constable—Complaint under s. 476, if necessary.

Magistrate who was actually trying a certain case issued warrants for arrest, which were made over to a constable for execution. As an explanation of his failure to make any arrest the constable gave false information in the thana that certain persons had committed an offence under s. 228-B, I. P. C. :

Held, that the constable committed an offence under s. 211, I. P. C., in a transaction which arose out of the execution of those warrants. The offence was committed in relation of those proceedings and consequently complaint was necessary under s. 476, Criminal P. C.

Mr. Sudhansu Sekhar Mukherji, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Hamidul Huq, for the Crown.

Henderson, J.—This is a rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Birbhum to show cause why the conviction of the petitioner under s. 211, I. P. C., should not be set aside. The rule was issued on grounds Nos. 1 and 5 attached to the petition. The petitioner is a constable. He was entrusted with the execution of two warrants which had been issued against two witnesses in a certain criminal case. He failed to execute the warrants. He appeared at the thana and gave an information to the effect that five persons had rescued one of these men and committed an offence under s. 225-B, I. P. C. There was an investigation. No charge-sheet was submitted as the Police came to the conclusion that the case was a doubtful one. The Magistrate did not pursue the matter any further and discharged the accused persons. One of those accused persons then instituted the present case under s. 211 against the petitioner. The first ground raises the question of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to take cognizance of the case at all. The contention made by Mr. Mukherji in support of the rule is that a complaint was necessary under s. 476, Criminal P. C. In order to determine the question we shall have to consider the meaning to be attached to the words "when such offence is alleged to have been committed in relation to any proceeding in any Court." It may be noted that the information given by the petitioner if false amounted to offences both under ss. 182 and 211, I. P. C.

It will be necessary for us to consider this point with regard to both the proceedings started by the petitioner and the proceedings in course of which the warrants were issued. I shall deal with the former first. There has been some difference of judicial opinion on this point. There can be no question that the information given by the petitioner led to proceedings of some sort before the Magistrate. In fact that result was bound to happen. For instance, the information was the foundation of a certain case which was entered as No. 314 of 1939 in the general register. In the course of those proceedings, the Magistrate passed orders for bail and finally an order of discharge. It was of course open to him to call for a charge sheet. On the other hand, at the time the offence was committed undoubtedly there was no case pending at all. It is not necessary for us now to express our own opinion on this matter. So far as this Court is concerned that point is concluded against the petitioner. I need only refer to two cases, Haibat Khan v. Emperor (1) and Tayabulla v. Emperor (2). We are bound to follow those decisions unless we are prepared to refer the matter to a Full Bench.

In our opinion, however, the present matter can be disposed of in connexion with the other case. Warrants for arrest had been issued by the Magistrate who was actually trying that case. Those warrants were made over to the petitioner for execution. It was as an explanation of his failure to make any arrest that he gave the information in the thana. If that case had not been on the Magistrate's file, it would have been quite impossible for the petitioner to commit this particular offence. He actually committed it in a transaction which arose out of the execution of those warrants. In these circumstances it seems impossible for us to say that the offence was not committed in relation to those proceedings. In this view it is not necessary to consider the second ground which really raises a question whether the appeal ought to be re-heard. We accordingly make the Rule absolute. The conviction and sentence are set aside and the petitioner is discharged from his bail. It will of course be open to the Magistrate concerned to take any proceedings if he thinks it desirable to do so.

Sen, J.—I agree.

DISTRICT COLLECTOR, MADURA—
RESPONDENT

Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act (II of 1927), ss. 44-B (2) (a) and (2) (d) (i)—Dismissal of application for resumption of temple inam, by Collector—Appeal lies to District Collector who can confirm order or cancel it and grant appropriate relief.

The words "may...pass an order confirming, modifying or cancelling the order of the Collector" in s. 44-B (2) (d) (i) Mad. Hindu Religious Endowment Act, are not intended to be confined to an order of resumption. An unqualified right of appeal is given, and if the Collector passes an order dismissing an application for resumption of a temple inam under s. 44-B (2) (a) an appeal lies under s. 44-B (2) (d) (i) to the District Collector who can confirm it or cancel it and he has the power to grant appropriate relief. Venkatasami v. Stridavama (1), relied on 194 Ind. Cas. 809 (2), distinguished.

Messrs. V. V. Chowdhary, Sheshachalapathy, N. Koteswara Rao and A. Venkatasami, for the Petitioner.

Mr. T. Krishna Row, for Govt. Pleader, for the Respondent.

• Leach, C. J.—The petitioner is the trustee of the Sri Kallalagar Devasthanam, Madura. He applied to the Revenue Divisional Officer, Melur, for orders under s. 44-B, Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1926, directing the resumption of certain service inams granted by the temple. The Revenue Divisional Officer rejected the applications and the petitioner then filed appeals to the Collector of Madura, who held that there was no right of appeal and consequently passed an order dismissing them all. The petitioner has now asked this Court to quash the order of the Collector and to direct him to hear the appeals. Section 44-B (2) (a), Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, states that the Collector may resume the whole or any part of an inam granted for the performance of a charity or service connected with a math or temple on one or more of the following grounds: (i) That the holder of the inam has made an exchange, gift, sale or mortgage of it or any portion of it or has granted a lease for a term exceeding five years; or (ii) that the holder of the inam has failed to perform or make the necessary arrangements for performing in accordance with the custom or usage of the math or temple the charity or service for performing which the inam had been made; or (iii) that the math or temple has ceased to exist or the charity or service in question has become impossible of performance. The allegation of the petitioner was that the holders of the inams had failed to perform the services required of them. Clause (d) (i) of sub-s. (2) says that a party aggrieved by an order of the Collector under cl. (a) may appeal to the District Collector who may after giving notice to the parties concerned and after holding such inquiry as may be prescribed pass an order confirming, modifying or cancelling the order of the Collector. In dismissing the appeals the District Collector gave no reasons for holding that there was no right of appeal in these cases, but it must be assumed that in his opinion there could only be an appeal under the section from an order of resumption.

If the orders of the Revenue Divisional Officer dismissing the applications were orders under cl. 2 (a) of s. 44-B appeals do lie. In Venkatasami v. Stridavamma (1) a Full Bench of this Court held that an order rejecting an application for the appointment of a Receiver was an order passed under s. 503, Civil P. C., 1882, and was appealable under s. 588, cl. 24 of that Code. While the Code expressly provided for an appeal against an order appointing a Receiver nothing was said about an appeal from an order refusing to appoint one. The corresponding provision of the present Code to s. 503 is O. XL, r. 1, and s. 588 (24) is now embodied in O. XLIII, r. 1 (s). The decision of the Full Bench was that a negative order was just as much within the section as an affirmative order and unless there is something in s. 44-B, Mad. Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1926, which prevents its application, the same principle must be applied here. I can see nothing in the section which prevents the application of the principle. In my opinion, the words "may...pass an order confirming, modifying or cancelling the order of the Collector" are not intended to be confined to an order of resumption. An unqualified right of appeal is given, and if the Collector passes an order dismissing an application the District Collector can confirm it or cancel it and as he has the power to cancel an order refusing to resume an inam, it must follow that he has the power to grant appropriate relief.

For the respondent, the recent decision in Application No. 229 of 1937 Pichu Iyengar v. Ramanuja Jeer Swamigal (2) has been relied on. In that case my learned brother and I held that a suit did not lie to set aside an order of the Hindu Religious Endowments Board refusing to settle a scheme for the administration of the endowments of a temple under s. 63 of the Act. There is nothing in common between s. 63 and s. 44-B. Sub-section (1) of s. 63 empowers the Board to settle a scheme after inquiring into the question whether a scheme is necessary. Sub-section (3) gives the Board power to modify or cancel a scheme which it has settled and sub-s. (4) gives the right to an interested party to institute a suit in the Court to modify or set aside an order of the Board modifying or cancelling a scheme. Before the Board can modify or cancel there must, of course, be a scheme and the right of suit only arises when the Board has decided to modify or cancel a scheme which it has settled under sub-s. (1). The wording of s. 63 makes it quite clear that the power of settling a scheme in the first instance vests exclusively in the Board which may refuse to exercise the power. The right of suit is given in order to provide a safeguard against improper modification or cancellation of a scheme already settled by the Board. The decision in Application No. 229 of 1937 Pichu Iyengar v. Ramanuja Jee Swamigal (2) did not turn on the question whether an order of the Board refusing to settle a scheme under sub-s. (1) was an order under that sub-section. That question did not really arise. The question was with regard to the interpretation of sub-ss. 3 and 4 and it was held that they only gave a right of suit in a case where the Board has modified or cancelled an existing scheme. Holding as I do that the principle in Venkatasami v. Stridavamma (1) is applicable to s. 44-B it follows that I am of opinion that the Collector of Madura, ought to have heard the appeals and not have dismissed them on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to entertain them. His order should be quashed and he should be directed to hear and decide the cases according to law. I consider that the petitioner is also entitled to his costs.

Krishnaswami Ayyangar, J.—I concur. At first sight it might seem that we are here accepting a construction of the words "an order . . . under cl. (a)" occurring in s. 44-B (2) (d) (i), different to that which we adopted in Application No. 229 of 1937 Pichu Iyengar v. Ramanuja Jee Swamigal (2). In that case the Court distinguished the decision of the Full Bench in Venkatasami v. Stridavamma (1) and held in spite of the similarity of the language, that the same, or practically the same, words in s. 63 (4) should receive a different interpretation on account of the special considerations which we held were applicable in the context. As in s. 63 so in s. 44-B (2) the character of the order which the section authorizes the Collector to make is positive, that is to make an order resuming the whole or any part of an inam of the nature specified in cl. (1). That order he may make on his own motion or on the application of the trustee, the Committee, the Board or any other person having an interest. Before making an order of resumption the Collector has to satisfy himself that one or more of the grounds mentioned in sub-s. 2 (a) are proved to exist. If no such proof is forthcoming, he cannot make the order, and must dismiss the application. The power to dismiss is self-evident, though not expressly mentioned. Clause (b) makes it obligatory on the Collector to give notice of the inquiry to the trustee, the Committee, or the Board, and also to the inamdar concerned. It is somewhat curious that among the persons to whom notice is to go, mention is not made of an applicant whose right to apply is derived from his interest in the math or temple only. It is difficult to imagine that having taken the trouble to move the Collector he is to drop out and take no part in the inquiry which he himself set on foot. Clause (d) provides a right of appeal to any, that is every party, aggrieved by the order of the Collector under cl. (a). It is plain, that a party may be aggrieved as much by a negative as by a positive order, and unless there is good reason to the contrary, express or implied, both kinds of orders would be comprehended by the word 'order.'

An applicant under s. 44-B comes forward with the case that an inam is being enjoyed by a person whose title to it has become extinguished. If an order of resumption is made, the inamdar may feel aggrieved by the order. On the contrary, if the inquiry results in a negative order, the applicant, or any of the persons specified in the section, or to whom notice has gone may be dissatisfied with the order, or in other words may be an aggrieved party, and to him a right of appeal is expressly given. I find no difficulty in holding that the District Collector is empowered by cl. (d) (i) to make the order of resumption in a case where the Collector refuses to make it in the first instance. Not only are the words "confirming, modifying or cancelling" in the clause under consideration, of sufficient amplitude, but it is an ordinary incident of the powers of an appellate tribunal to make the order which the tribunal of first instance failed to make. I agree that this case is not governed by the decision in Application No. 229 of 1937 Pichu Iyengar v. Ramanuja Jee Swamigal (2) which really proceeded on special grounds, which find no place in the present case. Memo of costs will follow.

AHMED HAJI SIDIK—ACCUSED

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 562—Discretion to be used in applying s. 562—Cattle-lifting by young accused acting like practised thief—Facts that he is young, is prepared to give sureties and has no previous conviction, are not sufficient for application of s. 562.

Section 562, Criminal P. C., must be applied with discretion, for otherwise, rather than preventing the manufacture of criminals, it may assist in their manufacture, for it may become known that first offences even of cattle-lifting can be committed with impunity.

Where in a case of cattle-lifting the evidence clearly shows the guilt of the accused and also shows the hand of a practised thief rather than the apprentice hand of a first offender, the fact that he was prepared to give sureties combined with his young age and the fact that he had no previous conviction are not sufficient to justify the application of s. 562, Criminal P. C.

Cr. Ref. made by the District Magistrate, Karachi, dated July 12, 1940.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Mr. A. I. Kazi, for the Accused.

Davis, C. J.—Notice was issued upon one Ahmed, son of Haji Sidik, to show cause why a sentence of substantive imprisonment should not be passed upon him for an offence of cattle-lifting of which he has been convicted and for which he was bound over by the Subordinate Judge and First Class Magistrate, Tatta, (Mr. Dinalshah) under s. 562, Criminal P. C., on the ground of his age and antecedents. Presumably, by "antecedents" the Magistrate referred to the fact that this accused has had no previous conviction, because we can find nothing else in his favour, and we do not think that this Magistrate has dealt with this aspect of the matter with sufficient care or has put upon the record the special circumstances which in a case of cattle-lifting, we think, should exist, before s. 562, Criminal P. C., is applied. Section 562, Criminal P. C. must be applied with discretion, for otherwise, rather than preventing the manufacture of criminals, it may assist in their manufacture, for it may become known that first offences even of cattle-lifting can be committed with impunity. The accused has only got to plead youth, produce sureties, show that he has no previous conviction for the sureties to be accepted, and the fact that in this case the accused in his statement so promptly offered sureties seems to suggest that he was given a hint that if he pleaded guilty he would be bound over.

The evidence, however, on the record clearly shows the guilt of the accused and would seem to show the hand of a practised thief rather than the apprentice hand of a first offender. A bullock was stolen while the owner was away for his morning prayers, and the bullock was traced to a hiding place in the jungle. The accused, however, could not be traced and so the tracking party lay in wait in ambush until the accused returned to lead the bullock away which he did at about sunset. Even then he escaped though the bullock was recovered and restored to its owner. We should have thought that upon these circumstances of the case, the Magistrate would have enquired more carefully into what he describes as the "antecedents" of the accused: he would have ascertained from the accused why he committed this offence, what work he was engaged upon, what temptation was placed in his way, who was his father, what chance there was, if leniency was shown, for his leading a life free from crime. Nothing of this sort was done, and the plea of the accused and the statement that he was prepared to give sureties combined with his age and the fact that he had no previous conviction were sufficient in the opinion of the Magistrate to justify the application of s. 562, Criminal P. C.

We do not think that these circumstances were sufficient to justify the application of s. 562, Criminal P. C. We consider that the accused acted in the manner of a practised thief, and that the Magistrate should not have dealt with this serious offence of cattle lifting in this particular fashion. The learned Advocate for the accused argues that he has already been in prison for a certain period of time. It is true he was imprisoned on September 3, but that is not long enough for prison to exercise its disciplinary and deterrent effect. We have not only to think of the accused himself in this case, and the effect of the sentence upon him, but the necessity of a deterrent effect upon him and upon others as well. We do not think the fact that he was bound over would deter him or others from committing such a serious offence in future. With a certain amount of hesitation however we are prepared to limit the sentence of imprisonment which we consider necessary to pass upon him to six months. We therefore set aside the order of the Magistrate under s. 562, Criminal P. C., and sentence the accused for this offence of which he has been rightly convicted to six months' rigorous imprisonment.

Hindu Law—Maintenance—Co-parcener—Minor co-parcener, if can sue for maintenance without asking for partition—Daughter, if can sue manager for maintenance.

Since a major co-parcener is entitled to sue for maintenance the right cannot be denied to a minor co-parcener and if he does happen to sue for maintenance he need not couple with the prayer for that relief a prayer for partition. 47 Ind. Cas. 354 (2) and 134 Ind. Cas. 1084 (3), followed. Narainbhai Vaghilal v. Ranchod Premchand (8), approved, Himmat Singh Bechar Singh v. Ganpat Singh (4), Ramchandra Sakharam v. Sakharam Gopal Vagh (5) and 64 Ind. Cas. 568 (6), not approved. 185 Ind. Cas. 26, Reversed. [p. 836, col. 1.]

Under the Hindu Law a daughter is entitled to maintain a suit for maintenance and consequently can sue the manager. Her right is not restricted by proceeding against her own father. The personal liability of the father furnishes an additional ground of claim over and above the liability of the family property. The former alone can be said to be enforceable against the father and his separate property. The latter gives rise to a right enforceable against the joint family as a whole. 185 Ind. Cas. 26, Reversed. [p. 839, col. 1.]

L. P. A. against the judgment of Wadsworth, J., reported in 185 Ind. Cas. 26.

Mr. K. P. Ramakrishna Ayyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Subramaniam, for the Respondents.

Leach, C. J.—This Letters Patent Appeal arises out of a suit filed in the Court of the District Munsif of Vayitri by the appellants and their parents for a decree for maintenance. Appellant No. 1 is the son and appellant No. 2 is the daughter of one Nagamparambil Imbichutty and his wife Kalyani. Both the appellants are minors. The parents and their two children constitute one of two branches of an undivided Hindu family of which respondent No. 1 is the manager. The respondents represent the other branch and were all made defendants. The District Munsif held that the parents of the appellants were not entitled under the Hindu Law to maintain a suit for maintenance, but that the appellants were, and granted them a decree. The respondents appealed to the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar, who gave judgment in their favour. The appellants then appealed to this Court. The appeal was heard by Wadsworth, J., who concurred in the decision of the Subordinate Judge. The appellants' parents accepted the decision of the District Munsif and therefore are not parties to this appeal. The parties are Tiyyas of South Malabar and it is common ground that the questions arising in the appeal have to be decided according to the ordinary rules of Hindu Law. Wadsworth, J. was of the opinion that a major co-parcener can never sue for maintenance. When maintenance is denied him his only remedy, he said, is to sue for partition. With regard to a minor co-parcener the learned Judge was of the opinion that a suit for maintenance might be filed, provided that he asked in the alternative for a decree for partition. It was for the Court to decide whether the appropriate relief was a decree for maintenance or a decree for partition. The learned Judge considered that the daughter of a co-parcener, like her father, can never maintain a suit for maintenance against the manager of the family. He said that her only remedy is to bring a suit against her father and claim maintenance out of his properties, joint and separate. Having obtained a decree she would be in a position to sell her father's share in the joint family estate in execution proceedings.

I find myself unable to concur in any of the conclusions of the learned Judge. It is true that there are statements in the latest edition of Mayne's "Hindu Law and Usage," 10th Edn., p. 825, and in Mullah's "Principles of Hindu Law," 8th Edn., p. 582, which support the learned Judge in his opinion that a major co-parcener cannot sue for maintenance, but they are based on certain observations of the Bombay High Court which appear to me to run contrary to decisions of the Privy Council. In passing I may mention that Varadachariar and Mockett, JJ. in Subbayya Thevar v. Sivagnana Marudappa Pandian (1), observed it was doubtful whether an adult son could maintain a suit for maintenance against his father when he could sue for partition, but they gave no reasons for the expression of doubt and presumably it was based on the Bombay cases. Every member of an undivided Hindu family is entitled to be maintained out of the family estate. In Venkata Mahipati Gangadara Rama Rao v. Rajah of Pithapur (2), (known as the Second Pithapur case), (2), Lord Dunedin, in delivering the judgment of the Board, dealt with the question of the right of a co-parcener to be maintained out of the common property. After pointing out that it was admitted on both sides of the bar,

"that in an ordinary joint family ruled by the Mitakshara law the junior members, down to three generations from the head of the family, have a co-parcenary interest accruing by birth in the ancestral property, that this co-parcenary interest carries with it the inchoate right to raise an action of partition, and that until partition is de facto accomplished these same persons have a right to maintenance."

Lord Dunedin went on to say :

"It seems clear that this right is an inherent quality of the right of co-parcenary, that is of common property. The individual enjoyment of the common property being ousted by the management of the head of the family, they have a right till they exercise their right to divide to be maintained out of the property which is common to them who are excluded from the management and to the head of the family who is invested with the management."

The right to maintenance out of joint family property was dealt with again by the Privy Council in Vellaiyappa Chetti v. Natarajan (3). The question there was whether an illegitimate son of a Sudra was entitled as a member of the family to maintenance out of the joint family property in the hands of the collaterals with whom his father was joint. Sir Dinshaw Mullah in delivering the judgment of the Board pointed out :

"That the illegitimate son of a Sudra by a continuous concubine is a member of the family ; that the share of inheritance given to him is not merely in lieu of maintenance, but in recognition of his status as a son ; and that where the father has left no separate property and no legitimate son but was joint with his collaterals, the illegitimate son is not entitled to demand a partition of the joint family property in their hands, but he is entitled as a member of the family to maintenance out of that property."

It is here emphasized that the share of inheritance, is not given in substitution of a right to maintenance. As there is a right to maintenance there must be an appropriate remedy when that right is denied. To say that the member of a joint family to whom maintenance has been denied shall cause the family to be divided and the family estate partitioned or go without anything is not providing an appropriate remedy for the injustice done to him. He may not want to have the family divided and it may be against his interest to have the family estate partitioned. In view of the fact that Wadsworth, J. relied on the statements in Mayne and Mullah based on the Bombay decisions, it is necessary that I should refer to them. The cases are, Himmat Singh Bechar Singh v. Ganapat Singh (4), Ramchandra Sakharam v. Sakharam Gopal Vagh (5) and Bhupal v. Tavanappa (6). In Himmat Singh Bechar Singh v. Ganapat Singh (4), Westropp, C. J. and Kemball, J. held that a suit for maintenance out of the ancestral estate by a Hindu son lies against his father when the estate is impartible. The Court did not decide the question of the right of a son to maintenance when he was in a position to sue for partition. The foot note to the report however shows that in an earlier case Westropp, C. J., and Melvill, J. had decided that a suit by one co-parcener against the other co-parceners for maintenance when the estate was impartible was unsustainable, "unless indeed he were illegitimate, deformed, or idiotic, or suffering from other disability to inherit, in which case he would not be a parcener entitled to an equal share with the other members of the family, but only a person entitled to maintenance."

It is quite clear from this observation that the opinion of the Bombay High Court was that the right to maintenance was in lieu of a right to share in the estate, but I am not aware that this opinion has been accepted by any other High Court and it appears to me that it is opposed to the principle which the judgments of the Privy Council in the Second Pithapur case (2) and in Vellaiyappa Chetty v. Natarajan (3), have established. In Ramchandra Sakharam v. Sakharam Gopal Vagh (5), Pinhey, J. regretted that the judgment in Himmat Singh Bechar Singh v. Ganpat Singh (4), allowed a member of a family owning an impartible estate to sue for maintenance, but the decision in that case was eventually accepted. The case in Bhupal v. Tavanappa (6), had reference to a family owning a partible estate. The plaintiff was a minor member of the family, but his father was alive and, therefore, under the Hindu Law as administered in the Bombay Presidency he could not file a suit for partition without the consent of his father. It was held that in such circumstances he was entitled to sue for maintenance because he was in the same position as if the estate were impartible. As the Bombay decisions proceed on the basis that the right to maintenance is given in lieu of a right to share—a position which has never been accepted in the Presidency—they cannot be accepted as correctly stating the law in Madras.

If a major co-parcener is entitled to sue for maintenance and I hold that he is, the right cannot be denied to a minor co-parcener and there appears to me to be no support at all for the view that if he does happen to sue for maintenance he must couple with the prayer for that relief a prayer for partition. The statement that a daughter cannot sue the manager of the family, but must proceed against her own father, is also unsupported by authority. On the contrary there is the Full Bench decision of this Court in Chedalavada Subbayya v. Chedalavada Ananda Ramayya (7), which shows that she is entitled to maintain a suit for her maintenance. It was there held that the right of a daughter to her marriage expenses and maintenance was based on her right to or interest in the joint family property, and not based on the natural obligation of a father to maintain his children. The contention that the liability of the joint family during the father's lifetime was only based on the father's obligation to maintain and bear the marriage expenses of his daughters, and the obligation fell upon the joint family through him, was rejected. Ramesam, J. said:

"So far as the joint family property is concerned, the obligation is that of all the members of the family, that is, the father and the brothers, and it is not that it was originally the obligation of the father only and through him it has extended to the whole joint family."

I agree with the following observations of Chandavarkar, J. in Narainbhai Vaghbi v. Ranchod Premchand (8), at p. 145:

"Apart from authority, there is no reason, founded on sound principle, why a Hindu co-parcener, who is excluded from the enjoyment of his joint rights, should be compelled at the instance of the other co-parceners or stranger's claiming under them and against his will to break up the joint family and forced to a suit for partition."

That would be the position if the judgment now under appeal were to stand. I have said sufficient to indicate that I consider the judgment to be against principle and authority and the appeal must be allowed. The result is that the case will be remanded to the Court of the Subordinate Judge. His decision was based merely on the issue relating to the maintainability of the suit. There are other issues and these will have to be decided. On the record reaching him the Subordinate Judge will hear and dispose of according to law the appellant's appeal from the judgment of the District Munsif, but as their parents did not appeal from the judgment of the District Munsif the suit will stand dismissed so far as they are concerned. The appellants are entitled to their costs in this appeal and in the second appeal. They will also be entitled to the refund of the court-fees paid in the second appeal and in the Letters Patent Appeal.

Krishnaswami Ayyangar, J.—I am of the same opinion but shall add a few words on certain aspects of the question argued before us. The judgment of Wadsworth, J., when analyzed seems to be based upon two propositions: (i) that the right of a member to maintenance out of joint family assets is only to be recognized where he has no right to enforce partition, and (ii) that the right of an unmarried minor daughter in a joint family to be maintained till marriage is enforceable only against the father and not against the joint family as a whole. The soundness of these propositions is open to question, as there seems to be nothing either in the texts or in the principles of Hindu Law to lend support to either of them. The learned Judge has referred in support of his decision to the statement of law contained in Mayne and in Mullah: see Mayne's Hindu Law, Edn. 10, p. 825; Mullah's Edn. 8, p. 582. While recognizing that these statements reflect the view taken in Bombay he accepted them as equally applicable to Madras, as the proposition is found stated in general term and no Madras authority to the contrary was cited before him. He did not notice the decision of the Privy Council in the Second Pithapur case (2), which unambiguously recognized the right of a co-parcener to be maintained out of the joint family property, but held, however, that it is the ordinary rule that a co-parcener cannot claim maintenance if he is entitled to claim partition.

Of the three Bombay cases cited in support of the proposition, the first two Himmat Singh Bechar Singh v. Ganpat Singh (4) and Ramchandra Sakham v. Sakham Gopal Vagh (5), related to a claim for maintenance by an adult son against the father. The family possessed property which was however not liable to partition, being by nature impartible. The claim was upheld. The right of a son to be maintained out of impartible joint family estate is beyond question, and does not appear to have ever been doubted. Decisions of the highest tribunal and of this Court in Maharaja of Venkata- giri v. Raja Rajeevaram Rao (9), have since authoritatively settled the point. It is plain therefore that no exception can be taken to the correctness of the actual decision of the Bombay High Court so far as it went. The ratio of the decision in the first of these cases Himmat Singh Bechar Singh v. Ganpat Singh (4), is to be found in the observation of Westropp, C. J. that "no authority was cited.....to show that where a son could not enforce a partition with his father, he was prevented from suing the latter for maintenance."

To recognize a right, namely the right of co-parcenary, but at the same time to deny a remedy for its infringement, is an impossible position and this is what seems to have weighed with the Court. The learned Chief Justice expressly refrained from expressing any opinion as to the right of a son to sue for maintenance, where he might, if he chose, sue for partition. This he did in spite of the fact that an earlier decision to which he had himself been a party had laid it down that a member of an undivided family could not sue for maintenance, unless by reason of a personal disqualification he was not entitled to sue for partition. The opinion here expressed does seem to support the view which has found favour with Wadsworth, J., but, as I shall presently show, is no longer tenable. Ramchandra Sakharam v. Sakharam Gopal Vagh (5), was a case in which the father was found to be in possession of impartible property, but not of any property in which the son could claim a share. Melvill, J. observed that as a general rule perhaps, a Hindu is not bound to support a grown up son, but held that the liability existed when the family estate is impartible. Pinhey, J. agreed but doubted whether it is good Hindu Law to say that an adult son in an undivided Hindu family who is suffering from no disability recognized by that law, can claim a separate maintenance from his father.

In the later decision of the Bombay High Court, Bhupal v. Tavanappa (6), the son sued for separate maintenance, as a co-parcener in a family consisting of the father, uncle, consin and step-brother, and owning joint family property which was partible. He could not however on the view of the law as accepted in that Presidency, enforce a partition against a father when the father was joint in estate with his own ancestor or his collaterals and against his consent. Right to partition not existing, the son was held, on the principle of the earlier decisions, entitled to sue for maintenance. In all these cases, the right of the son to sue for maintenance was expressly stated to arise on account of the absence of the right to partition. The larger remedy being available, the lesser relief was denied on the footing that the primary and the only true remedy for the excluded parcener was to enforce his right to partition by suit. When this remedy is cut out by reason of a personal disqualification or otherwise, the co-parcenary right ordinarily inherent in every member of the family suffers a diminution and it then finds expression in the inferior remedy of maintenance. The right to maintenance is thus to be regarded as a substitute for the lost right to a share and is in the nature of a secondary remedy to be granted in lieu of the primary one, where it is not available. This I think is the rationale which underlies the decisions of the Bombay High Court. With all respect, I regret to say that such a view of a co-parcener's right cannot be sustained either in principle or on authority. It is well to remember in this connection that a right to maintenance may arise in one of three ways. First, the existence of certain specified personal relationships, independently of the possession of joint property in the person liable, may give rise to the claim. The right in this class of cases is enforceable personally against the person on whom the law casts the burden, and is based on the well-known text of Manu, that,

"the aged parents, a virtuous wife, and an infant child must be maintained even by the doing of a hundred prohibited acts."

The right does not extend to remoter relations. The second and the more important ground of claim is that based not on pure relationship but on membership in a joint family possessed of joint family property. The Privy Council has in the Second Pithapur case (2), examined the jural basis of the right in this class of cases, and declared that it is an inherent quality or the co-parcenary property that it should afford the means of sustenance to all the members of the co-parcenary while the family remained joint. This is clear from the following observations of their Lordships:

"This co-parcenary interest carries with it the inchoate right to raise an action for partition, and until partition is de facto accomplished these same persons (junior members) have a right to maintenance."

The meaning of this statement is sufficiently explicit. The junior members are entitled to maintenance until partition out of the common property where that property is ordinary partible property. The right will cease the moment a partition takes place, for thereafter there is no common property. It will continue to subsist so long as partition does not take place, and in the case of impartible property it is incapable of being terminated. The effect of the texts on the subject is correctly stated in Mayne's Hindu Law, p. 821, in the following passage:

"The head of the undivided family is bound to maintain its members, their wives and their children; to perform their ceremonies and defray the expenses of their marriages."

Membership in the family, and the existence of joint property are the only conditions to which the right is subject. The third head of claim is based on the text of Yagnavalkya, which imposes a personal disqualification by reason of some defect such as blindness, impotency, etc. (Yagnavalkya, Second, 140-142). The defect operates to exclude the sufferer from a share in the inheritance, but, in lieu of it, he is recognized as being entitled to maintenance. This, in my opinion, is the only class of cases in which the right to maintenance can be said to be recognized as a substitute for the right to partition with some justification, though even here the right springs from the existence of joint property subject to the burden of supporting all the members of the family whether entitled to partition or not. But even if there is no impediment to the exercise of the right to partition, there can be no logical reason for compelling a member to sue for partition, when the head of the family neglects to maintain him. The right of an excluded member to sue for joint possession, without being obliged to sue for partition is recognized by Art. 127, Lim. Act. From this it is to my mind clear, that partition is not to be regarded as the sole remedy. Joint possession which he can seek is in most cases indistinguishable from maintenance out of the family assets, and it is therefore difficult to maintain a distinction in principle between the two. The logic of the observations of Chandavarkar, J., in Narainbhai Vaghilai v. Ranchod Premchand (8) referred to in the judgment of my Lord, appears to my mind to be indisputable.

That the true origin of the right in the second and third classes of cases is the existence of joint property, partible or impartible, scarcely admits of doubt at the present day. It seems to me to be absolutely impossible to get away from the principle laid down by the Privy Council which is that the right of a junior member in a joint family where the family possesses property is a right which springs from the joint property itself. When the question came to be examined by the Board in Vellaiyappa Chetti v. Natarajan (3), in which the claim to maintenance was advanced by an illegitimate son of a deceased member of a joint family possessing joint family property, their Lordships used language which removes all further doubt on the point. Referring to the view taken in a decision of this Court in Ranoji v. Kandoji (10) that the share of inheritance given to the illegitimate son was merely in lieu of maintenance in the case of Sudras, their Lordships made the following observations:

"On the consideration of the texts and the cases on the subject their Lordships are of opinion that the illegitimate son of a Sudra by a continuous concubine has the status of the son and that he is a member of the family; that the share of inheritance given to him is not merely in lieu of maintenance, but in recognition of his status as a son; that where the father has left no separate property and no legitimate son, but was joint with his collaterals, as in the present case, the illegitimate son is not entitled to demand a partition of the joint family property in their hands, but he is entitled as a member of the family to maintenance out of that property. (The italics are mine.)"

In the Full Bench decision of this Court in Chedalavada Subbayya v. Chedalavada Ananda Ramayya (7), the basis of the right of a daughter to maintenance out of the family property was examined, and it was again clearly laid down that the obligation was not personal to the father who was along with others a member of the family but that the obligation lay upon the family as a whole, that is to say against the family property. The texts and the decisions were gone into, and the learned Judges expressed the opinion that the right of the daughter was the surviving remnant of a larger right she once enjoyed in the joint family property. These authorities seem to take the question beyond the region of controversy. The right of a co-parcener to be maintained out of joint property is merely one of the modes in which the co-parcenary right finds expression. That being so, it is not possible to agree with the view that that right is not to be exercised if there is a right to partition. There is no warrant for holding that an excluded member must either sue for partition or be content to remain without being maintained at the expense of the joint family property. Wadsworth, J. has held that the daughter must institute a suit against the father in the first instance and pursue her remedies against his share in the joint family property. This view can be understood only on the theory that the daughter's right to maintenance is based solely on the personal obligation of the father. As I have already indicated, this theory is opposed to the decision in the Full Bench case already referred. The personal liability of the father furnishes an additional ground of claim over and above the liability of the family property. The former alone can be said to be enforceable against the father and his separate property. The latter gives rise to a right enforceable against the joint family as a whole.

*versusOFFICIAL LIQUIDATOR, BENARES*BANK LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION),*ALLAHABAD—OPPOSITE PARTY

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 3—Debt remains but remedy is barred—Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 229—Liquidator's power to set-off—Distinction between set-off in his case and one under provisions of O. VIII, r. 6, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908)—Liquidator can appropriate sum owing to company even if company's claim is not legally recoverable by lapse of time—Set-off.

The effect of s. 3, Lim. Act, is to bring about the automatic dismissal of suits, appeals and applications founded upon debts or causes of action which, according to their various periods of limitation, are time-barred. What the Lim. Act does not do is to extinguish the debt. The debt remains, but the remedy is destroyed.

A distinction must be drawn between the right of set-off which the Official Liquidator has under the mutual credit clause of the Insolvency Act, and the right of set-off which a defendant in a suit governed by the Civil P. C., exercises under O. VIII, r. 6 under the Civil P. C. It is required as a condition precedent to a set-off that the money should be "legally recoverable" by the defendant from the plaintiff. But the set-off which the Official Liquidator exercises is a set-off under the powers conferred on him by the Companies Act, and not under any power conferred on him by the Civil P. C., and there is no such condition precedent. The Official Liquidator can appropriate so much of the sum that the depositor owes to the company in satisfaction of what the company owes to the depositor even if the company's claim is not legally recoverable by lapse of time. 66 Ind. Cas. 209 (1), relied on.

Mr. ~~Sawalji~~ Mehrotra, for the Applicant.

Mr. I. B. Banerji, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is an application by a creditor of the Benares Bank Limited by way of appeal from a decision of the Official

Liquidator. The applicant was admittedly a person who on August 3, 1939, the date of the commencement of this winding up, was a depositor with the Bank by way of fixed deposit to the extent of Rs. 190 odd. He, accordingly, in due course submitted a proof to the Official Liquidator claiming to be a creditor of the company in this amount. The Official Liquidator admitted that he was a creditor on fixed deposit to the extent he claimed, but went on to assert that the applicant was at the same time a guarantor of the overdraft account of another client of the Bank, which account stood in debit on August 3, 1939 to the extent of over Rs. 2,000. The Official Liquidator, therefore claimed to appropriate the Rs. 190 owing by the Bank to the applicant in part satisfaction of the liability of upwards Rs. 2,000 due from the applicant to the Bank on the guarantee. Although he did not say so in so many words, what the Official Liquidator did was to put into operation the mutual credit section of the Prov. Insol. Act, and set off what was due from the company against what was due to the company. The applicant has taken two points. First he says that, inasmuch as the Official Liquidator had not exhausted all his remedies against the principal debtor on the overdraft account, there was nothing due from him and, accordingly, that there was nothing against which the company's debt to him could be set off. The applicant has, however, given up that point. The other point taken by the applicant is this. He says that the Official Liquidator is about to sue him in a separate proceeding on the guarantee and that in that separate suit he (the applicant) proposes to rely on the Lim. Act, as his defence. From that he argues that, if he is successful in that defence, it will be found that there was nothing due on August 3, 1939 from him to the company, and, again, that there was nothing against which the sum of Rs. 190 could be set off.

In my view even this argument bears little investigation. The effect of s. 3, Lim. Act, is to bring about the automatic dismissal of suits, appeals and applications founded upon debts or causes of action which, according to their various periods of limitation, are time-barred. What the Lim. Act does not do is to extinguish the debt. The debt remains, but the remedy is destroyed. Even, therefore, if it should turn out to be a fact—and I have not the least idea whether it will or not that the present applicant is able to resist the Official Liquidator's suit on the ground that the debt is time-barred, the effect of that will not be to wipe the debt out of existence. The debt would continue to exist, although the Official Liquidator would be unable to institute a suit or to prefer an appeal or to make an application in respect of it. In exercising his rights under the mutual credit clause of the Insol. Act, the Official Liquidator has purported to do none of those things. All that has happened is that he has said to the applicant, to whom he admits the company owes money that he proposes to appropriate so much of the sum that the applicant owes to the company in satisfaction of what the company owes to the applicant.

The applicant has, I cannot help feeling, been labouring under some slight difficulty in distinguishing between the right of set-off which the Official Liquidator has exercised in this case and the right of set-off which a defendant in a suit governed by the Civil P. C. exercises under O. VIII, r. 6 to Sch. I of that Code. Under the Civil P. C., of course, the position is quite different. The Code governs the position of persons who are plaintiffs and defendants respectively in suits. If a defendant desires to avail himself of a set-off in a suit, he must bring himself within the provisions of O. VIII, r. 6, and those provisions obviously are very different from the conditions which had to be fulfilled by the Official Liquidator in this case. One has only to point to the circumstance that, under the Civil P. C. it is required as a condition precedent to a set-off that the money should be "legally recoverable" by the defendant from the plaintiff. That is a very different thing from anything we have here because the set-off which the Official Liquidator has purported to exercise is a set-off under the powers conferred on him by the Companies Act, and not under any power conferred on him by the Civil P. C. In Narendra Lal Khan v. Tarubala Dasi (1) at p. 823, Sir George Rankin expresses the point in another connection by saying :

"Thus, if the attorney has any form of lien upon property in respect of his bills of costs, he can exercise that lien notwithstanding that by the terms of the Lim. Act, he could not bring a suit....."

The point there was, I think, in principle the same as the point here. For these reasons this appeal must be dismissed.

RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 149, 2 (12). O. II, r. 2—Court granting time for payment of court-fee after presentation of plaint, improperly and without sufficient cause—Effect—Interest on mesne profits, if can be awarded as mesne profits—Suit for possession of property—Past mesne profits, whether must be claimed—Separate suit for such mesne profits, if lies.

Where the Court has given improperly and without sufficient cause, time for payment of court-fee after the plaint had been presented, the effect of the grant of such time is that the plaint takes effect as if it had been presented along with the full court-fee on the date of its first presentation, and no question of limitation arises where the plaint originally presented is within time. 95 Ind. Cas. 439 (9), relied on. [p. 842, col. 2.]

Interest can rightly be awarded on mesne profits by the Court as mesne profits. The fact that by the delay in the filing of the suit for mesne profits the claim on the score of interest proved to be much larger in amount than it would otherwise have been, does not disentitle the plaintiff to the interest. [p. 843, col. 1.]

A claim for past mesne profits need not be sued for in a suit for recovery of possession of the property in respect of which mesne profits are claimed by reason of O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C. A separate suit for mesne profits is competent. 27 Ind. Cas. 679 (1) held correctly decided and followed. 134 Ind. Cas. 654 (3), distinguished. [p. 841, col. 1.]

[Case-law referred to.]

A. against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Cuddalore, in O. S. No. 4 of 1933.

Mr. J. R. Gundappa Rao, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. E. Ramabhadrachari, for the Respondent.

Pandrang Row, J.—This is an appeal by defendants Nos. 1 and 3 to 6 from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Cuddalore dated October 11, 1937, in O. S. No. 4 of 1933, a suit to recover mesne profits for Fasli 1933 in respect of certain properties together with interest thereon. There was an earlier suit between the parties which related to these very properties for cancelling a certain lease granted in respect of them by the plaintiff's great grandmother (defendant No. 2) on August 8, 1923, for three years in favour of defendant No. 1. The properties in question belonged to the plaintiff who was then a minor under the testamentary guardianship of defendant No. 2, the great grandmother who had been appointed to manage the properties by the will of the plaintiff's father, one Thangaswami dated July 6, 1915. The testator died a few days later and in the previous suit there was no dispute as to the genuineness of the will. That suit was decreed and the appeal from the decree of the First Court was dismissed by the High Court on August 30, 1932. There was some attempt made to take the matter to the Privy Council but the idea was finally abandoned and the decree of the High Court which dismissed the appeal with costs was the final decision in that suit. The present suit was instituted on October 14, 1932, that is to say, one and a half month after the High Court had decided the suit in favour of the plaintiff who claims to have attained majority, being till then a ward of the Court under the Guardians and Wards Act, only, after attaining her 21st year which according to her, was on October 15, 1929. The present suit was thus instituted just before the lapse of the period of three years after attaining majority. The suit has been decreed by the Subordinate Judge and the present appeal is, as stated already, by defendants Nos. 1 and 3 to 6.

As in the Court below, in this appeal also, a good deal of argument has been directed to the point of the alleged bar imposed by O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C., to the present suit, the appellants' contention being that the present claim for mesne profits for Fasli 1333 should either have been included or had actually been included in the earlier suit inasmuch as it arose out of the same cause of action. This point has been discussed by the Court below some what briefly and rightly so because the point is really concluded by the Full Bench decision in Ponnammal v. Ramamirda Aiyar (1), which has been subsequently followed in Khuddus v. Mohammad Hussain (2), and it may also be added that no other High Court has taken a different view, and on the other hand there are several decisions of other High Courts which take the same view, namely that a claim for past mesne profits need not be sued for in a suit for recovery of possession of the property in respect of which mesne profits are claimed by reason of O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C. The only important reason given to us by the learned Advocate for the appellants for not accepting the view of the lower Court on this point which merely followed the Full Bench decision in Ponnammal v.

Ramamirda Aiyar (1), is that in view of certain observations and the decision in a later Privy Council case Naba Kumar v. Radhashyam (3), it must be held that the view taken by the Full Bench in Ponnammal v. Ramamirda Aiyar (1), is not correct. No doubt it was also argued that as a matter of fact the claim to past mesne profits had been made in the earlier suit and therefore the present claim was not maintainable. There is, however, no substance in this contention. A perusal of the plaint in the former suit makes it perfectly clear that in so many words the past mesne profits due to the plaintiff in respect of the plaint properties was not included in the suit and that the plaintiff intended to bring a separate suit in respect of the same. In view of this specific statement, and in the absence of any language in the prayer portion of the plaint to show that any claim to past mesne profits was included in the plaint, it is impossible to accept this contention.

As regards the main argument, namely that the Full Bench decision in Ponnammal v. Ramamirda Aiyar (1), is not good law, it is enough to say that nothing in the Privy Council judgment in Naba Kumar v. Radhashyam (3), is really contrary to what has been stated by the Full Bench decision in Ponnammal v. Ramamirda Aiyar (1). The Privy Council case does not deal with a claim to mesne profits in the first place. Secondly it is a case in which the prayer that was made in the subsequent suit, namely for taking accounts, was a prayer that could have been made on the same foundation of fact and law as the claim in the earlier case which was to declare that a certain trust existed and for reconveyance of certain properties. It is not as if this contention that the Full Bench decision in Ponnammal v. Ramamirda Aiyar (1), is not correct in view of the Privy Council decision in Naba Kumar v. Radhashyam (3), is a new argument put forward for the first time. A similar contention appears to have been pressed in Tadapalli Ramiah v. Madalo Thathiah (4), and repelled in that case by Venkataramana Rao, J. It is not necessary to repeat the reasons given by the learned Judge for repelling this contention. We are in general agreement with what he has said in that case and we need only repeat some of the references which he has made in the judgment, namely, In re Ekanthalingaswami Koil (5), Ramu Kallappa v. Saidappa Siderama (6) and Ram Karan Singh v. Nakkhed Ahir (7). In the last of these cases, there is a comparatively full discussion of the subject. It is enough to add that the law as laid down by the decision in Ponnammal v. Ramamirda Aiyar (1), merely reiterated and re-affirmed the law prevailing in Madras since Tirupati v. Narasimha (8), which is a case of 1888 and the Full Bench decision in Ponnammal v. Ramamirda Aiyar (1), which is a case of 1914 has held the field without any judicial expression of any doubt regarding its correctness all these years. A further point is that no other High Court has sounded a different note, and on other hand there are several decisions which take the same view. In these circumstances and having regard to the state of the authorities which are practically unanimous for so many years, it is impossible for us to accept the contention put forward on behalf of the appellants in this case. We therefore find that there is no bar imposed by O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C., on the plaintiff's claim for mesne profits in this case.

The other points raised in this appeal on behalf of the appellants can be disposed of somewhat briefly because there is really no substance in them. One of the two points is one of limitation which was sought to be based on two grounds. These are dealt with in paras. 64 to 86 of the lower Court's judgment and para. 88 respectively, and there is little to add to what the lower Court has said on these points. The first ground is a pure question of fact, namely, the date of the birth of the plaintiff. There is an extract from the birth registrar which is not attacked on the ground of forgery or the like which shows that the plaintiff was born as alleged by her on October 15, 1908. This practically unimpeachable evidence and other evidence which points in the same direction has been sought to be attacked on the ground that the birth register extract relates not to the plaintiff but to a younger sister of hers who died a few days after birth. This story has been sought to be established by the evidence of witnesses who were not accepted by the lower Court as witnesses of the truth. No attempt was made to file any extract of of the birth register or death register relating to this alleged younger sister of the plaintiff, and as the learned Subordinate Judge points out, if for any reason such an extract could not be got, it was open to the appellants to have examined at least the Village Munsif of the village in which the plaintiff, according to the appellants, is alleged to have been born, namely, the village Movur. On the whole, we see no reason to differ from the conclusion come to by the trial Judge on this pure question of fact and in respect of which unimpeachable documentary evidence is all on the side of the plaintiff and there is only unreliable oral evidence on the side of the appellants.

As regards the other ground, very little was said to us in support of the contention and obviously the contention is without force. The contention is that the suit is barred by limitation because the Court gave improperly and without sufficient cause time for payment of court-fee after the plaint had been presented. Whatever might have been the reasons for the Court's granting time, the effect of the grant of such time is clear, namely, that the plaint takes effect as if it had been presented along with the full court-fee on the date of its first presentation, a proposition put beyond doubt by s. 149 of the Code: vide also the decision in Basavayya v. Venkatappayya (9). The contention therefore that this claim is barred by limitation has no substance and must be repelled.

The remaining point of any substance is that the value of paddy fixed by the Court below is exclusive. The value has been fixed at Rs. 2-10-0 per kalam, a kalam being said to be 34 measures. This estimate is, in our opinion, in accordance with the weight of the evidence which has been fully discussed. There has been no omission on the part of the Court below to deal with any material part of the evidence bearing on this point and we do not see any error of judgment, in assessing the value to be given to the evidence on both sides. It is a point worthy of mention that defendant No. 1 himself when he claimed rent in respect of these very properties from his sub-tenants claimed the value of paddy at Rs. 4 and at Rs. 3-8-0. Even allowing for some exaggeration, it is impossible for it to be contended now that Rs. 2-10-0 is excessive. The estimate is mainly based on the evidence given in the previous suit by a clerk of a paddy merchant whose disinterestedness is not unquestioned and his evidence was obviously based on the accounts which he had in his possession. That is really the best evidence available in the present case on this point, and the lower Court could not be said to have gone wrong in relying mainly on that evidence.

Something was said to us on the award of interest on the amount of mesne profits, calculated on this basis, namely, Rs. 2-10-0 a kalam in the lower Court's decree. The definition of 'mesne profits' in the Civil P. C. itself shows that interest is included; in other words, interest can rightly be awarded by the Court as mesne profits. It was also stated that by the delay in the filing of the present suit, the claim on the score of interest has proved to be much larger in amount than it would otherwise have been. This does not however show that the plaintiff is not entitled to the interest which she claims. On the other hand, the appellants, have, in our opinion, not the slightest claim on the indulgence of this Court. Their conduct as found in the previous suit was extremely reprehensible. There was a conspiracy to defeat the rights of the plaintiff who was then a minor to which her testamentary guardian herself was a party. A grosser case of fraud could hardly be imagined and the present suit is practically for mesne profits in respect of the very property which was attempted to be alienated by means of a lease for a very low rent in favour of one of the appellants, namely, defendant No. 1. We see therefore no reason whatever to interfere with the decree of the Court below. That decree is affirmed and this appeal is dismissed with costs of the respondent (plaintiff). We are informed that an application has been made to scale down the decree-debt in the Court below, and it is enough to say in connection with this that the decree in this appeal will not prejudice in any way the disposal of the application, if any, to scale down the debt.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against an acquittal presented by direction of the Governor. The incident in question arose out of the strike at the Burma Oil Company's works at Syriam in January of last year. At 8-10 A. M. on the morning of January 26, 1939, a first information report was made at the Police Station at Thilawa alleging that a haystack had been burnt at Thilawa the night before at about 10-30 P. M. About 4-30 P. M. on January 26, Mr. Tooke, the Sub-Divisional Police Officer at Syriam, gave orders by word of mouth to Maung Kyin Maung, a Sub-Inspector of Police, also stationed at Syriam to arrest one Forja Singh in connection with the haystack burning. Maung Kyin Maung was within the Police area under the control of Mr. Tooke but Thilawa was not in the sub-area embraced by the Sub-Inspector's activities. In accordance with this verbal order, Maung Kyin Maung proceeded to arrest Forja Singh—and he was the man that Mr. Tooke had so ordered him to arrest—in connection with the burning of the haystack on the previous night. As a matter of fact, Mr. Tooke told Maung Kyin Maung that Forja Singh was to be arrested for an offence punishable under s. 436, which is mischief by fire with intent to destroy a house whereas in point of fact if Forja Singh was to be arrested for any offence at all in accordance with the first information report, it would be an offence punishable under s. 435, which is mischief by fire with intent to cause damage. However, that point is really immaterial because the offences under both those sections are both cognizable ones.

Maung Kyin Maung and other Police Officers went to a meeting of the strikers and he arrested Forja Singh. After he had done so, the Police party, himself included, was attacked by a mob of about 200 people who attempted to rescue Forja Singh. The present respondents were some of those who comprised that mob and they were afterwards arrested and charged with an offence punishable under s. 225 which provides the punishment for any one who attempts to rescue another person from any custody in which that person is lawfully detained for an offence. The whole question before me is whether Forja Singh, arrested as he was by Maung Kyin Maung in the circumstances just mentioned, was lawfully detained within the meaning of that section. The learned Magistrate who tried the respondents convicted them all. He bound over two of them and the rest he sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment each.

On appeal the learned Sessions Judge held that Forja Singh was not lawfully detained and, following the decision of my brother Mosely in Mohamed Ismail v. Emperor (1) he acquitted all the respondents and set aside the convictions and sentences. In my judgment, Mohamed Ismail v. Emperor (1) disposes of this appeal. I see no reason whatever for saying that it is not a correct decision. If I had had any reason to suppose that it was incorrect, I should have referred that question of law for the determination of a Bench, but I think that that decision is quite right and concludes this matter. The learned Govt. Advocate has brought to my notice three cases from which he argued that Mohamed Ismail v. Emperor (1) was not rightly decided. The latest of those cases is a Bombay case in which a Bench of the Bombay High Court discussed Mosely, J.'s decision. I refer to Keshavlal Harilal v. Emperor (2). That case however is distinguishable from the present case. In the Bombay case the Police constables were present when the complaint was made so that the Police Officers in question had personal knowledge of the making of the complaint. In Kishun Mandar v. Emperor (3), it is to be observed that the Police constable who was deputed by the Sub-Inspector went along with the complainant from whom the constable, acting independently, obtained credible information which entitled him to act under s. 54, Criminal P. C.

The third case is that of In re Ratna Mudali (4). That case is distinguishable because, as is pointed out by Ayling, J. it was in evidence that the constable knew that the warrant in that case had in fact been issued. All those three cases are therefore distinguishable from the present case where there is not the slightest suggestion that Maung Kyin Maung acted in any way on his own initiative or that he had any information or suspicion apart from what his superior officer told him. To my mind the important part of Mosely, J.'s judgment is those few words at p. 756* where he said. "... provided that the officer is acting on his own initiative or independently in the course of his duty." If he is doing that he may then act under s. 25, Criminal P. C., but if he is not acting on his own initiative or independently, then, if he is merely doing what his superior officer tells him to do, an order in writing must be delivered to him under s. 56. In my judgment there is no reason to dispute the correctness of Mosely, J.'s decision which, in my opinion, entirely covers the present case. In those circumstances the respondents' appeals to the Sessions Judge were rightly allowed and they were properly acquitted.

The learned Govt. Advocate however has pointed out that there is a second ground to his memorandum of appeal to this Court and he asks me to convict the respondents of some other offence such, for instance, as rioting, if the materials on the record in my opinion justify it. It is enough on that point for me to say this: that the learned Sessions Judge was apparently never asked to do that. What the learned Sessions Judge did was to come to the conclusion that no offence punishable under s. 225 had been committed by the respondents. With that decision I am, as I have already said in entire agreement. I do not think it right for me now, in the circumstances of the present case and having regard both to the fact that the Sessions Judge was not asked to record a conviction under some other section and also to the fact that it is precisely one year to-night since the haystack was set on fire, to go into these cases in detail to see what if any other offence these respondents have committed. Furthermore, the learned Govt. Advocate informed me at the outset of the hearing of this appeal that he did not now ask for anything more than a nominal sentence; all he wanted was an expression of opinion about Mohamed Ismail v. Emperor (1). I am much obliged to the learned Advocates on both sides for the full and clear argument which they have presented. This appeal must in my judgment be dismissed.

LEACH, C. J. AND KRISHNASWAMI

AYYANGAR, J.

VAJJULA—APPELLANT

HANUMANTHA VAJJULA GOPAL

RESPONDENTS

Hindu Law — Adoption — Widow — Consent of sapindas—Burden is upon widow to prove that consent was refused with improper motive—Madras School—Nearest sapindas improperly refusing consent—Consent of next nearest sapindas is necessary—All sapindas dead—There is no residuary power in widow to adopt.

The Judge cannot assume that the sapinda had refused his consent to the adoption of the widow on the ground that his rights as a reversioner would come to an end if the widow adopted a son to her husband, which is an improper motive. The burden is on the widow to prove improper motive. 56 Ind. Cas. 391 (1), referred to.

Under the Mitakshara Law as interpreted in the Madras Presidency the widow cannot adopt a son to her husband unless she has received authority from him or has received the consent of her husband's sapindas. The consent of the sapinda is necessary in the absence of direct authority from the husband. If the nearest sapindas improperly refuse their consent to an adoption the widow is, however, entitled to seek the consent of the next nearest sapindas. There is no residuary power in a widow to adopt when her husband's sapindas are all dead.

Mr. K. Kameswara Rao, for Appellant.

Messrs. P. V. Rajamannar and K. Subba Rao, for the Respondents.

Leach, C. J.—The respondents have not appeared to oppose this appeal but as the Court has decided to allow it the reasons must be stated. The suit out of which the appeal arises was filed by the appellant in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry for a declaration that the adoption of respondent No. 1 by respondent No. 2 was invalid. Respondent No. 2 is the widow of one Jagappa, alias Jagannatha Sastrulu, who died on December 11, 1868. The adoption took place on July 4, 1929, nearly 61 years after the death of the husband of respondent No. 2. Respondent No. 2 was a very young girl when her husband died and was still under the guardianship of her father. There were two defences set up. It was said that the appellant and other sapindas had given their consent to the adoption and that the widow was given power to adopt by a will executed by her deceased husband. The Subordinate Judge held that the appellant was the only living sapinda, that he had not given his consent, and that the alleged will was a forgery, but he dismissed the suit on the ground that the appellant had refused his consent from an improper motive. That the consent has been refused was common ground, but the appellant was not asked why he had refused his consent and there is nothing in the evidence which indicates that he refused his consent improperly. The Subordinate Judge assumed that the appellant had refused his consent, on the ground that his rights as a reversioner would come to an end if the widow adopted a son to her husband and considered that this would be an improper motive. The Subordinate Judge was not entitled to make this assumption. The burden was on the respondents to prove improper motive: see Krishnayya v. Lakshminpathi (1), at p. 658 and as the burden had not been discharged the appellant was entitled to succeed.

Under the Mitakshara law as interpreted in this Province the widow cannot adopt a son to her husband unless she has received authority from him or has received the consent of her husband's sapindas. That the consent of the sapindas is necessary in the absence of direct authority from the husband is to be gathered from the decisions of the Privy Council in Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (2), Vellanki Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi (3), Veerabasavaraju v.

Balasurya Prasud Rao (4), Krishnayya v. Lakshmipathi (1), Krishnayya Rao v. Venkata Kumara Mahipathi Surya Rao Bohadur (5) and Balasubramanya Pandya v. Subhaya Tevar (6): A Full Bench decision of this Court of which my learned brother and I were members had to consider the effect of these authorities in the recent case in S. A. No. 174 of 1936 Seshamma v. Venkata Narasimharao (7), and it was there held that they had decided that in the absence of authority from her husband the widow could adopt only with the consent of the nearest agnates, unless consent was improperly withheld, in which case she might lawfully adopt with the consent of the next nearest agnates. If there were no agnates she must look for advice to the cognates, it having been definitely laid down by the Privy Council that she was not competent to decide on an adoption for herself.

In delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Balasubramanya Pandya v. Subhaya Tevar (6), Sir George Lowndes observed that it would be difficult for their Lordships to hold that under the Madras law there would be any residuary power in the widow to adopt in the absence of sapindas, but as it was not necessary to give a definite pronouncement on the question the discussion stopped there. In my opinion, the effect of the cases which have been decided by the Judicial Committee on appeals from this Court is that a widow has no power to adopt unless she has express authority from her husband or in the absence of such authority she is acting under the advice of her husband's sapindas. In Patnaloo Appaleswami v. Ellamanchilli Moosalaya (8), a Bench of the Rangoon High Court held that a widow has the same powers to adopt as her husband had in his lifetime when there are no sapindas living, but the learned Judges did not examine the line of cases starting with Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (2). One of the learned Judges (Das, J.) based this opinion on a passage in the judgment of the Privy Council in Sri Balusu Gurulingaswami v. Sri Balusu Ramalakshamma (9), where their Lordships said that in Madras "it is established.....that unless there is some express prohibition by the husband, the wife's power, at least with the concurrence of sapindas in cases when that is required, is co-extensive with that of the husband."

In that case the Judicial Committee was merely concerned with the question whether a widow could make an adoption of the only son of a kinsman and was not considering the question now under discussion. The other learned Judge (Dunkley, J.) relied on the judgment of the Privy Council in Krishnayya v. Lakshmipathi (1), but I am unable to read it in the same way as he did. The question which the Privy Council was considering there was whether there could be a lawful adoption when the consent of some of the nearest sapindas had not been sought or obtained. Their Lordships held that the absence of consent on the part of the nearest sapindas could not be made good by the authorization of distant relatives. If the nearest sapindas improperly refuse their consent to an adoption the widow is, however, entitled to seek the consent of the next nearest sapindas. In my judgment the decisions of the Privy Council when fully examined entirely negative the proposition that there is residuary power in a widow to adopt when her husband's sapindas are all dead. It follows that in my opinion respondent No. 2 had no power to adopt respondent No. 1 and that the decision of the Subordinate Judge is erroneous. I would allow the appeal and decree the appellant's suit with costs both here and below.

under pro-note—Pro-note purporting to be jointly executed by A and B in renewal of old joint pro-note—A alone executing it—No evidence whether A executed only on faith that B would also execute—Note, if binding on A.

Where there is no evidence that a party to a promissory note authorized anyone to affix his mark and all that is in evidence is that he promised to execute the note and went away without doing so there was no execution either by him or by a person authorized to execute on his behalf. He is not, therefore, liable under the promissory note. 44 Ind. Cas. 813 (1), distinguished.

When A executes a bond on the faith that B will also execute it and that B fails to do so, A has an equity in his favour relieving him from a liability which he never intended to undertake. But it is also settled that if A signed the bond without any regard to the question whether B signed it or not and if he delivered it as his bond, he is liable thereon, even though B did not sign. The question whether a particular instrument was signed by one of the parties on the faith, that the other would also sign is a question of fact and or is a ground of defence which must be established by the person who has signed the instrument.

When there is a promissory note purporting to be a joint promissory note of A and B, in renewal of previous joint promissory note and A alone executes and delivers that note and B fails to execute it, the note is binding on A, when there is no evidence one way or the other whether or not A executed only on the faith that B would also execute.

Mr. N. Vasudeva Rao, for the Petitioners.

Mr. A. Lakshmayya, for the Respondents.

Order.—The petitioners were plaintiffs in a small cause suit based on a promissory note, Ex. A, dated March 25, 1933, for a sum of Rs. 167-12-9. The promissory note reads as if it were a joint promissory note by defendants Nos. 1 and 2. But it is found that it was not executed by defendant No. 2 though it was executed by defendant No. 1. What happened was that the two defendants went to the plaintiffs and asked them to write a promissory note in renewal of two earlier promissory notes, the major note being Ex. C, a joint bond executed by both defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the lesser one being Ex. B, a promissory note by defendant No. 1 alone. While the suit note was being written defendant No. 2 went away. The scribe wrote at the foot of the note the description of defendant No. 2, as the person who affixed his mark, but no mark or thumb print was in fact taken from defendant No. 2. Defendant No. 1, executed the promissory note and he did not defend the suit nor has he appeared to oppose this revision petition. The lower Court found that as the note was intended to be a joint note and was not executed by one of the joint promisors, there was no completed contract and the suit had to be dismissed as against both the defendants. In revision, it is contended that both the defendants are liable.

The case with reference to defendant No. 2, is simple. It is based on the decision of a Bench of this Court in Balayya v. Subbayya (1), which held that when a party to a promissory note authorized the scribe to affix his mark and under that authority the scribe wrote words indicating that the promisor was the person who affixed the mark, but did not actually put any mark, there was a sufficient execution by the agent of the promisor to bind him. It seems to me that there are no such facts in the present case. There is no evidence that defendant No. 2, authorized anyone to affix his mark; all that we have is evidence that he promised to execute the note and went away without doing so. There was no execution either by him or by a person authorized to execute on his behalf. Clearly therefore the decision of the lower Court, so far as defendant No. 2, is concerned, is correct. The position with reference to defendant No. 1, is not so clear and there is a good deal of rather conflicting case-law on the subject. Most of the cases decided by the Indian Courts have references to s. 87, Negotiable Instruments Act, and are cases in which when one person has signed a bond the signature of the other person is forged on that bond either with or without the connivance of the actual executant. We are not here concerned with any alteration of the instrument or any forgery of the signature of defendant No. 2.

The simple position is this: When there is a promissory note purporting to be a joint promissory note of A and B and A alone executes and delivers that note and B fails to execute it, is the note binding on A, when there is no evidence one way or the other whether or not A executed only on the faith that B would also execute? It is, I think, well-established that when A executes a bond on the faith that B will also execute it and that B fails to do so, A has an equity in his favour relieving him from a liability which he never intended to undertake. But it seems also to be settled that if A signed the bond without any regard to the question whether B signed it or not and if he delivered it as his bond, he is liable thereon, even though B did not sign. The English cases do to some extent distinguish between a deed and a simple contract. Seeing that under s. 46, Negotiable Instruments Act, the making of a promissory note is completed by delivery, it is difficult to see how a person who signs and delivers a negotiable instrument is in any better position than a person who signs, seals and delivers a deed. The instrument is in law the instrument of the maker, unless he can establish any equity whereby it should not be enforced against him. It seems to be settled that the question whether a particular instrument was signed by one of the parties on the faith, that the other would also sign is a question of fact: vide Latch v. Wedlake (2). Is this question of fact one which must be proved by the plaintiff who seeks to impose liability upon the actual executant or is it a ground of defence which must be established by the person who has signed the instrument? The latter view seems to be a correct view. It is true that Jessel M. R. has stated in Luke v. South Kensington Hotel Co. (3), at p. 125 that: "it is well-settled that if two persons execute a deed on the faith that a third will do so, and that is known to the other parties to the deed, the deed does not bind in equity if the third refuses to execute."

This dictum has however, been criticized by the House of Lords as going too far. In Nass v. Westminster Bank Ltd., (4), where their Lordships discuss the cases on this subject and point out that they are mainly cases where it was sought to impose on a man a greater liability than he had ever intended to bear, where his intention was not in doubt, and where, if he were not able to get equitable relief, he would suffer substantial loss. Their Lordships further on quote with approval the case in Ex parte Harding, In re Smith, Fleming and Co. (5), where it is expressly decided that the person who asserts such an equity in his favour to relieve him from the obligations of the contract which he has signed must affirm and prove the grounds upon which that equity is based. Their Lordships state that

"two propositions as regards the equity in question may safely be asserted, namely, (i) that the intention of the person who is setting it up is not a matter of mere conjecture, and (ii) that the equity comes into play only when, in its absence, the legal effect of the unconditional execution of the deed will lead to substantial injustice."

I may observe that the case just referred to in Ex parte Harding; In re Smith, Fleming and Co., (5), was not a case of a deed but of a simple letter of guarantee. And it was clearly laid down that the burden of proof lay upon the person who, having signed that guarantee sought equitable relief against the obligation which it imposed. It is true that in that case the letter of guarantee did not in its actual recitals indicate an intention that other parties should also sign it. But the previous letter leading up to that letter of guarantee made this point clear. Turning to the facts of the present case, there was no doubt an intention to execute a joint promissory note. But defendant No. 1 was personally liable under both of the promissory notes which the suit note superseded. There was no question therefore of his being mere surety or guarantor and the plaintiffs could have recovered the whole amount of the two earlier promissory notes from him personally. It is true that the failure of defendant No. 2 to execute the suit promissory note might make it difficult for defendant No. 1 to establish a right of contribution as against him. But so far as the plaintiffs were concerned the liability with which they propose to charge defendant No. 1, under this note is not different from the liability which he proposed to undertake; and there is no evidence that he would have been unwilling to sign this promissory note, had it not been for the belief that defendant No. 2, was also going to sign it. Defendant No. 1 has not denied his liability and has not put forward any plea that his liability was incurred conditionally upon defendant No. 2 undertaking a similar liability.

On these facts and on the authorities cited, it seems to me that defendant No. 1, having signed and delivered this promissory note and having established no grounds to relieve him from the liability incurred thereunder must be held liable for the suit claim. In the result therefore I allow the petition to the extent that the plaintiffs will have a decree for the suit claim with interest at the contract rate until to-day and subsequent interest at 6 per cent. till realization and costs against defendant No. 1 only. As against defendant No. 2 the revision petition is dismissed with costs.

The question whether an objection is barred as not having been made within the time prescribed by s. 111, U. P. Land Revenue Act, is essentially a question for the Revenue Court to decide, and it is not open to the Civil Court to question the decision of Revenue Courts on this point. The only circumstance in which the Civil Court would be justified in questioning the order passed by the Revenue Court under s. 111 (1) (b) is where the Civil Court finds that the question raised is not a question of proprietary title. 80 Ind. S. C. A. against the order of the District Judge of Hardoi, dated April 15, 1937.

Mr. K. P. Misra, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. N. Das, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a second civil appeal against the order of the learned District Judge of Hardoi dated April 15, 1937, upholding the judgment and decree passed by the learned Munsif of Hardoi dated December 17, 1936, dismissing the plaintiff's suit.

The suit was brought by Inderjit in consequence of an order passed by the Commissioner in a partition case on February 11, 1935. Inderjit had applied for partition on June 23, 1934, and proclamation had issued under s. 110 of the Land Revenue Act. Thereafter on May 13, 1935, partition proceedings had been drafted, Inderjit filed an objection on June 4, against the provision made in the partition proceedings for the partition of the sir land. The provision was that the sir of each co-sharer would go with his patti and that compensation would be given in cash from non-statutory and other statutory tenancy land. The objection was disallowed by the partition officer, and an appeal against his order was dismissed by the Deputy Commissioner on September 10, 1935. In second appeal the Commissioner allowed the objection, considering that it raised a question of proprietary title, and ordered the objector under s. 111 (1) (b) of the Land Revenue Act to establish his claim in a Civil Court by instituting a suit within three months. Inderjit accordingly filed a suit for declaration that he owned half the sir land mentioned in Lists A, B, and C attached to the plaint.

The suit was contested on various grounds including the ground that the order of the Commissioner was ultra vires. The Munsif dismissed the suit holding that the order under s. 111 could be assailed in the Civil Court, that the Commissioner's order was ultra vires and, therefore, the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit. He further held that there was no cause of action for instituting a suit with respect to the sir land mentioned in List B attached to the plaint because this sir land was not included in the partition and therefore the Commissioner's order did not apply to it.

It was apparently realised by the plaintiff Inderjit that so far as the sir land in List B was concerned, it was incorrectly stated in the plaint that the cause of action accrued on February 11, 1936, the date of the Commissioner's order, because in the lower Appellate Court he filed an application for amendment of this paragraph of the plaint so as to show that the cause of action with regard to the sir land in List B arose in 1933.

The lower Appellate Court agreed with the view taken by the Munsif that the Commissioner's order was invalid, that it was open to the Civil Court to consider whether it was valid or invalid, and that as it was invalid there was no proper cause of action with regard to the property in Lists A and C. As regards the application for amendment of the plaint in regard to the property in list B, the District Judge observed that the application for amendment was very belated and that in view of the decision with regard to the property in Lists A and C that the suit was not maintainable in the Civil Court, it was not desirable to let the case proceed with respect to the property in List B. He did not, however, allow the application for amendment.

Four questions arise for decision in this appeal:

(1) Whether the Civil Court was competent to question the order of the Revenue Court under s. 111 of the Land Revenue Act.

(2) If so, whether the lower Courts correctly held that the order of the Commissioner was invalid because objections had been taken by the plaintiff after the time contemplated by s. 111.

(3) Whether the plaintiff's objection did in fact raise a question of proprietary title.

(4) Whether, if the appeal is allowed, on the above points the appellant should be allowed to amend his plaint so as to alter the cause of action in regard to the property in List B.

On the first point the lower Appellate Court has relied on a decision of the Judicial Commissioner's Court in Mukhtar Ahmad v. Barati Lal, (17 O. C. 224). (1) This is undoubtedly an authority which supports the view taken by the lower Appellate Court. It was said in that case that when the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is invoked they must satisfy themselves that all the conditions and qualifications annexed to the grant of jurisdiction have been strictly complied with. It must be made clear that the question of title which they are invited to decide has been raised by an objection filed by Revenue Court within the time provided by s. 110 of the Act, and it must be shown that the conditions laid down in s. 111, sub-s. (1) cls. (a) and (b) have been satisfied.

We have been referred to other cases bearing on this question, some of which support the appellant and some of which are against him. Reference was made to another decision of the Judicial Commissioner's Court in Ram Lakhan Singh v. Rampal Singh, (24 O. C. 143) (2), but the question did not directly arise in that case. It was only said that the competence of a Civil Court to decide the question of title depends upon the choice exercised by the Revenue Court. If the latter Court passes an order under cl. (a) or (b) a Civil Court has authority to try and decide the question of title, but it is a condition precedent that such an order be made,

In a case of this Court, Ram Sidh Singh v. Mahanth Bakoodas (4 O. W. N. 1196) (3) it was said that the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in matters relating to partition is expressly ousted, except in so far as is provided by the provisions of s. 111 of the Land Revenue Act, and the conditions and qualifications annexed to the grant of jurisdiction must be strictly complied with.

In Ram Sumaran v. Sarjoo Persad (5 O. W. N. 1062) (4) it was observed by a Single

Judge of this Court that where a statute confers jurisdiction upon a tribunal of limited authority, the conditions and qualifications under which jurisdiction has to be exercised must be directly complied and a Revenue Court is not entitled to entertain an objection raising a question of proprietary, if not filed at the proper time. Reference was made in this case to Mukhtar Ahmad v. Barati Lal, (1) and the principle laid down in that case was accepted as correct. The learned Judge said that a Revenue Court is not entitled to entertain an objection raising a question of proprietary title if not filed at the proper time.

The question came up before this Court again in Dhanpati Kuer v. Kandhaiya Bakshi Singh, (7 O. W. N. 586) (5), but here, as in some other case also, the question primarily considered was whether the Revenue Court was justified in passing an order under s. 111, of the Land Revenue Act when the provisions of that section had not been strictly complied with in regard to the time within which the objection should have been made.

It can, however, be said that it appears to have been assumed in this and in some other cases that it was open to the Civil Court to consider whether the order of the Revenue Court was legally valid.

On the other hand there is a ruling of the Allahabad High Court in Parosiddhan Rai v. Dhaneshwar Rai, (A. I. R. 1925 All. 818) (6), which supports the view that it is not open to the Civil Court to question the validity of the order of the Revenue Court on the ground that the provisions of s. 111 had not been complied. In this case no objection was taken after issue of the formal notice of the application for partition but when steps were taken to draft the partition proceedings under s. 114 of the Land Revenue Act, a definite and specific objection was made. The Assistant Collector held that this was an objection which ought to have been presented under s. 110 of the Land Revenue Act, and he refused to entertain it. The Collector in appeal directed the application to be entertained notwithstanding that it was not raised within the period limited by the proclamation under s. 110. It was observed by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court that the question whether the objector Parsiddhan Rai should have been permitted to make the objection when he allowed the period limited by the proclamation under s. 110 of the Land Revenue Act to expire, was essentially one for the Revenue Courts to decide. It was also said that the Collector seemed to have dealt with the matter very sensibly. There appears to be no case of this Court in which it has been expressly held that a Civil Court is either competent or incompetent to consider the question, but the competency of the Civil Court has certainly been assumed in cases where the validity of the Revenue Court's order has been examined. We should ourselves be inclined to agree with the Allahabad High Court in Parsiddhan Rai v. Dhaneshar Rai (6), that the question whether an objection is barred as not having been made within the time prescribed by s. 111, is essentially a question for the Revenue Court to decide and that it is not open to the Civil Court to question the decision of the Revenue Courts on this point. The only circumstance in which in our opinion, the Civil Court would be justified in questioning the order passed by the Revenue Court under s. 111 (1) (b) is where the Civil Court finds that the question raised is not a question of proprietary title.

We have, however, considered whether it was correctly held by the lower Appellate Court in the present case that the order of the Commissioner was invalid by reason of the fact that the objection was made after the time contemplated by s. 111. We have already referred to some cases in which it was held that the Revenue Court can extend the time fixed by s. 111. This was also held by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner in Kali Persad v. Thakur Dei (1 O. L. J. 81) (7), where it was said that a Revenue Court acting under s. 114 of the Land Revenue Act is not precluded from dealing with an objection filed beyond the time fixed by it for filing objections, if it has not up to that time taken any action under that section.

Similarly in Budhan Singh v. Kalka Singh, (A I R 1926 Oudh 309) (8), it was held that in partition proceedings where an objection is raised after the appointed time but before the Court has taken any steps under s. 113 a Revenue Court is not precluded from dealing with it, and if it does decide it, the decision will be taken to be under s. 111.

Again in Jagdeo Singh v. Banaphal Pandey, (17 R. D. 640) (9), it was held that where in partition proceedings an objection raising a question of proprietary title is not raised at an earlier stage, but is put forward at a very late stage, the period for filing objections can be extended for good cause.

We are very doubtful whether in view of these pronouncements we should be justified in holding that the order of the Commissioner was invalid in the present case on the ground that the objection had not been made within the proper time. It is clear that the Revenue Courts have discretion to extend the time, and as we have said we do not think that their decision on this point should be questioned in a Civil Court. We are of opinion that in the present case at least there is no sufficient reason to hold that the order is invalid. We are unable, therefore, to agree with the lower Appellate Court on this point.

On the question whether the objection does in fact raise a question of proprietary title, we have been referred to a clear ruling by the Board of Revenue in Din Dayal v. Ram Narain (2 U. D. 343) (10) that the question of a claim to separate ownership of certain sir lands in a muafi holding is a question of proprietary title, and in view of this ruling we see no reason to doubt that the question raised in the present case is a question of proprietary title, as was the opinion of the Commissioner.

There remains the question whether, as on these findings it will be necessary to allow the appeal and remand the suit, the application of the appellant for amendment of the plaint in regard to the sir land in List B should be allowed. In the circumstances we consider that it should be allowed.

We accordingly allow this appeal, set aside the orders passed by the lower Courts and remand the suit to the trial Court for decision on the merits after amendment by the appellant of the plaint with regard to the property in List B. Costs hitherto incurred in this Court and in the Courts below will abide the result.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), ss. 50-A, 50, 45 (6)—Tenant ejected under s. 45 (6) or his suit dismissed under s. 50—Whether can sue in Civil Court under any title other than title as tenant.

A suit by a person claiming possession of the land, under title of ownership or any title other than a title as tenants, (as a mortgagee with possession), is not barred under the provisions of s. 50-A, Punjab Ten. Act, even if previously the said person has been ejected by a Revenue Court under s. 45, sub-s. (6) or his suit has been dismissed under s. 50 and the Civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain such a suit. 177 Ind. Cas. 703 (6), Overruled, 188 Ind. Cas. 682, Reversed. [p. 853, col. 1.]

Order of Reference

Dalip Singh, J.—The facts of this case are as follows: 15 kanals, 17 marlas of land belong to three brothers, Mangal Singh, Gandu Singh and Bhagat Singh, sons of Bishan Das, in equal shares. Mangal Singh and Gandu Singh mortgaged with possession two-thirds share with Hussain Bakhsh. On July 5, 1920, Hussain Bakhsh mortgaged his mortgagee rights with Hassan Mohammad, father of the present plaintiffs, Ilam Din and Imam Din, and on the same day and by the same document, Bhagat Singh mortgaged his one-third share to Hassan Mohammad with possession. On April 25, 1922, Bhagat Singh mortgaged a large area of land including his share in this land to R. S. Sohna Mal with possession. On March 19, 1932 R. S. Sohna Mal transferred his mortgagee rights by sale to Mangal Singh son of R. S. Sohna Mal, and Iqbal Singh with possession. In 1929 Umar Din, a co-sharer in a khata appertaining to this land, applied for partition. Five or 6 marlas of land fell to the share of Bhagat Singh. Sohna Mal was recorded in the revenue papers as a mortgagee with possession and Ilam Din and Imam Din, the present plaintiffs, as tenants-at-will. Following the mortgage of July 5, 1920, two mutations were entered, one with respect to the shares of Mangal Singh and Gandu Singh in favour of Hassan Mohammad and one, which should have been in the name of Bhagat Singh, was, by mistake, entered in the name of Ishar Das, another co-sharer in this khata, who was shown as the mortgagor. Mangal Singh and Iqbal Singh being entered in the revenue papers as mortgagees with possession applied for notice of ejectment against Ilam Din and Imam Din. On November 11, 1935, there was a report that Ilam Din had refused to accept service, execution was taken out and the plaintiffs were rejected. On June 20, 1936, the plaintiffs brought a suit to contest liability to ejectment in the Revenue Court. The suit was dismissed as barred by limitation on October 3, 1936 and an appeal from that decision to the Collector was also dismissed.

The plaintiffs now brought the present suit for possession as mortgagees entitled to possession on January 5, 1937. The suit was decreed on January 31, 1938 and the appeal to the learned District Judge was dismissed on February 25, 1939. The second appeal to this Court was accepted by the learned Single Judge on the ground of jurisdiction only. It was held that, under s. 50-A, Punjab Ten. Act, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to entertain this suit was barred because ejectment had been ordered against the plaintiffs under s. 45 (6) and their suit under s. 50 had also been dismissed.

Upon this point there appears to be a conflict of rulings. In Sultan Mahmud v. Ahmad Khan (1) though the facts are not clearly stated in that judgment, it appears that I, sitting in Single Bench, decided that a suit of this nature would not be barred under the provisions of s. 50-A on the ground that this was not a suit to contest liability to ejectment or to recover compensation or to recover possession of occupancy rights but was a suit claiming under a different title which could not have been decided in the Revenue Courts at all and, as it seemed essential that some Court should have jurisdiction to decide the question of title, a suit was not barred by reason of the provisions of s. 50-A. This ruling was followed by my learned brother Tek Chand, J., in Maru v. Abdul Rahim (2) where he also sitting in Single Bench, came to the conclusion that the law was correctly laid down in the previous ruling of mine: Sultan Mahmud v. Ahmad Khan (1).

On the other hand in Mehar Khan v. Atta Mohammad (3) which is equivalent to 16 Lah. 1086 (3) Currie, J., sitting in Single Bench held that a similar case was barred under the provisions of s. 50-A and a Letters Patent Appeal from that judgment was dismissed in limine, on July 9, 1935 by a Division Bench consisting of Addison and Din Muhammad, JJ. The ruling reported in Sultan Mahmud v. Ahmad Khan (1) does not appear to have been brought to the notice of the learned Judge who decided the case in Mehar Khan v. Atta Mohamad (3) but my learned brother Tek Chand, J. considered both the Single Bench rulings in Maru v. Abdul Rahim (2).

It would obviously be curious if, sitting together, the two Judges, who have expressed the same opinion already sitting in Single Bench, should overrule the decision of the Single Bench or differ from the ruling of the Letters Patent Appeal of 1935. I would therefore refer this case for decision to a Full Bench as the matter is of some importance and may arise again. Indeed, the cases mentioned above show that it has arisen at least three times already. The question for the Full Bench would be:

"Whether a suit by a person claiming possession of the land, under title of ownership or any title other than a title as tenant, is or is not barred under the provisions of s. 50-A, Punjab Ten. Act, where previously the said person has been ejected by a Revenue Court under s. 45, sub-s. (6) or his suit has been dismissed under s. 50?"

Tek Chand, J.—I agree.

Mr. Mahbub Elahi, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nand Lal Salooja, for the Respondents (Mangal Singh and Iqbal Singh).

Salé, J.—The question referred to the Full Bench for decision is:

"Whether a suit by a person claiming possession of the land, under title of ownership or any title other than a title as tenants, is or is not barred under the provisions of s. 50-A, Punjab Ten. Act, where previously the said person has been ejected by a Revenue Court under s. 45 sub-s. (6) or his suit has been dismissed under s. 50?"

The material facts are stated in the order of reference, but it may be mentioned here that Mr. Salooja, on behalf of the respondents, does not accept all these facts, so stated, as correct; and since, as a result of our decision, the case must be remanded to the learned Judge in Single Bench for decision of the appeal on the merits, I would avoid repetition of anything in the nature of a controversial statement of facts. But for the purposes of this reference, the facts, as admitted, are simple. The plaintiffs in this case were recorded in the revenue records as tenants-at-will. The defendants obtained possession of the land in suit as a result of partition proceedings; and they moved the revenue authorities to eject the plaintiffs under s. 45, Ten. Act. The plaintiffs sued in the Revenue Court to contest the notice of ejectment but the suit was dismissed as time-barred. Thereafter the plaintiffs instituted this suit in the Civil Court for possession of the land on the ground that they were not tenants-at-will but mortgagees entitled to possession. The suit was decreed by the trial Court and an appeal to the learned District Judge was dismissed. A second appeal to this Court was accepted by the learned Judge sitting in Single Bench on the ground of jurisdiction only. He held that under s. 50-A, Punjab Ten. Act, jurisdiction of a Civil Court to entertain this suit was barred because, ejectment of the plaintiffs had been ordered under s. 45, Ten. Act, and their suit under s. 50 had been dismissed. It is necessary to recite the text of s. 50-A, Punjab Ten. Act, because this section has been misquoted both in certain rulings of this Court as well as in some standard editions of the Ten. Act:

"50-A. No person whose ejectment has been ordered Bar to civil suits. by a Revenue Court under s. 45, sub-s. (6), or whose suit has been dismissed under s. 50, may institute a suit in a Civil Court to contest his liability to ejectment or to recover possession or occupancy rights, or to recover compensation."

The section was introduced by the Punjab Tenancy Amending Act V of 1929, and the section, as above quoted, is taken from the official edition which corresponds with the text as published in the Gazette of September 9, 1929. It should be noted that the bar relates to civil suits "to contest liability to ejectment, or to recover possession or occupancy rights, or to recover compensation" and not "... to recover possession of occupancy rights..." as sometimes misquoted.

The argument of Mr. Salooja, on behalf of the respondents, whose objection as to jurisdiction prevailed with the learned Judge in Single Bench, briefly stated, is that on the plain wording of this section, which is very widely expressed, all suits to contest ejectment are barred even if the contesting plaintiff is claiming on a title other than that of a tenant e. g., whether as owner by prescription, or otherwise, or as a mortgagee. The argument on behalf of the plaintiffs is that the section only refers to suits by tenants or disappointed tenants litigating on the basis of their tenancy and does not apply to cases where the plaintiffs claim a title outside the purview of the Ten. Act. The learned

Judge in Single Bench in accepting Mr. Salooja's argument, followed a Single Bench authority by Currie, J., in 1935, cited as Mehar Khan v. Atta Mohamad (3), a Letters Patent Appeal against which was dismissed in limine. But a contrary decision had been given by Dalip Singh, J., in Sultan Mahmud v. Ahmad Khan (1), which does not appear to have been brought to the notice of Currie, J. In Maru v. Abdul Rahim (2), Tek Chand, J., in a considered judgment, discussed both these authorities and preferred to follow Dalip Singh, J.'s ruling, holding that Mehar Khan v. Atta Mohamad (3) was wrongly decided. In both Sultan Mahmud v. Ahmad Khan (1) and Maru v. Abdul Rahim (2), the plaintiffs sued on a title claimed to have been acquired by adverse possession; and Tek Chand, J. held that s. 50-A, Ten. Act

"must be read along with ss. 45 (6) and 50, which are expressly mentioned in it, and the only reasonable interpretation which can be put on it is that a second trial between the parties is barred in the Civil Courts on the grounds on which they had fought it in the Revenue Court under s. 45 (6) or s. 50. It is conceded that a Revenue Court has no jurisdiction to determine the question of the alleged acquisition of title by adverse possession."

The learned Judge went on to refer to a judgment of the Financial Commissioner reported in Sadhu Ram v. Mehr Shah (4), where the learned Financial Commissioner observed that "only a Civil Court can adjudicate finally on the question of adverse possession." In this connection, Tek Chand, J., further cited some observations by Benton, J. made in Thakar Gir v. Baisakhi (5), [a ruling on which Currie, J., relied in Mehar Khan v. Atta Mohamad (3)], where Benton, J. sitting with Sir Meredyth Plowden, observed "that a person who has received notice of ejectment and who sues in the Revenue Court, either gets decrees protecting him, or he fails and is ejected. If he claims to be a proprietor it is still open to him to sue in the Civil Court and claim the land as a proprietor, if this be his contention."

In the case decided by Currie, J., Mehar Khan v. Atta Mohamad (3), the plaintiff had claimed a title by adverse possession, but Currie, J., observed that the case was not apparently fought out on that basis in the Revenue Court and he expressed the view that if the question of title had been raised in the suit, the case must have been referred to the Civil Court because the question was one that could only be decided by a Civil Court. He held, however, that since the question of title had not been raised, the suit was in substance one to contest liability to ejectment, which had already been decided by a Revenue Court and was, therefore, barred under the provisions of s. 50-A, Ten. Act. Thus, Currie, J., does not appear to have supported the view that a person ejected under s. 45, Ten. Act, would be barred from agitating in a Civil Court a claim based on a title not cognizable by a Revenue Court.

In Ujagar Singh v. Gora (6), Bhide, J., in deciding a reference made by the Commissioner of the Lahore Division, held that s. 50-A does not restrict the grounds on which liability to ejectment may be contested and apparently took the view that where a tenant, ejected under s. 45, instituted a suit for possession on the ground that he has acquired title by adverse possession, such a suit is cognizable by a Revenue Court and not by a Civil Court. Mr. Salooja, concedes that the proposition that all questions of title can be decided by a Revenue Court, is too widely expressed and there can be no doubt that it is incorrect. His point, however, is that whatever may have been the intention of the Legislature in amending the Ten. Act by the introduction of s. 50-A, the section, as it stands, bars a person who has been litigating in the Revenue Court from pursuing the litigation in a Civil Court even though he seeks his remedy in the Civil Courts on a different title. Mr. Salooja conceded that if a person on whom a notice of ejectment is served went straight to a Civil Court on a question of title, s. 50-A would be no bar, but he contends that if he had first instituted a suit in a Revenue Court and failed, he would be barred from pursuing his remedy in a Civil Court under s. 50-A.

In our view, s. 50-A, must, as pointed out by Tek Chand, J., in Maru v. Abdul Rahim (2), be read with ss. 45 (6) and 50, Ten. Act, which the amending s. 50-A is intended to implement. The Ten. Act is a statute dealing primarily with relations between landlords and tenants and as has been frequently held does not govern the case of a person who litigates under a title other than that of a tenant. We are fortified in this view by the history of this amending section. In Cheta v. Baija (7) a Full Bench of this Court had, in 1928, held that after the failure of an action by a tenant under s. 45, Ten. Act, a disappointed claimant can still seek a remedy in a Civil Court because recourse to the Civil Court was not expressly barred by the Act. The intention of the Ten. Act, is to make the decision of the Revenue Courts under ss. 45 and 50 of the Act final; and the object of the proposed amendment appears to have been to give statutory effect to this intention by expressly barring recourse to a Civil Court by a disappointed tenant for the purpose of attacking the decision of the Revenue Court.

Accordingly, in our view, the meaning of s. 50-A is that a disappointed tenant whose ejection has been ordered by a Revenue Court under s. 45 or whose suit has been dismissed under s. 50, cannot institute a suit in a Civil Court to contest his liability or to recover possession as a tenant or to recover occupancy rights or to recover compensation. In other words, the amending section bars a person from re-agitating in a Civil Court the question of his status as a tenant which he has lost by the action of the Revenue Court; but it does not prevent the person so ejected from instituting a suit for recovery of possession by establishing a title other than that of a tenant, e. g., by adverse possession or, as in the present case, as a mortgagee with possession. The answer, therefore, to the question referred to us is that in the circumstances stated a suit is not barred by the provisions of s. 50-A, Ten. Act. The case must now be returned to the learned Judge in Single Bench for decision of the appeal on the merits.

C. R. App. of the order of the District Judge of Barabanki, dated November 23, 1937.

Mr. Mohammad Husain, for the Applicants.

Messrs. Sri Ram and Lekh Ram Varma, for the Opposite Parties.

Order.—This revision application is, directed against the appellate order passed by the District Judge of Bara Banki allowing the appeal and setting aside the order of the Assistant Collector, first class in a suit for redemption of a mortgage under s. 12 of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act.

The facts giving rise to the present litigation are as follows:—

One Ramzan Ali mortgaged the property in suit with possession to defendant No. 2, Fazal Ahmad, under a mortgage-deed dated July 7, 1902. The defendant No. 2 sold his mortgagee right to Amjad Husain, defendant No. 1. On July 21, 1904, Ramzan Ali is alleged to have sold his equity of redemption to one Abdul Hakim, defendant No. 3; who in turn made a gift of the property in favour of his wife, the plaintiff. The plaintiff thereupon filed an application for redemption of the said mortgage of July 7, 1902, under s. 12 of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act in the Court of the Assistant Collector, First Class.

Defendant No. 3 admitted the plaintiff's claim while defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who are the present applicants, filed a joint written statement contesting the application on the ground that Ramzan Ali never sold his equity of redemption and consequently the plaintiff was not a representative of the original mortgagor entitled as such to sue for redemption. In para. 12 of the written statement the sale-deed of July 21, 1904, was denied and was alleged to be a forgery. The said defendants also denied that the plaintiff was an agriculturist as defined in the U. P. Agri. Relief Act and hence the plaintiff was not entitled to sue under s. 12 of the Agri. Relief Act.

The learned Assistant Collector found that the plaintiff had not proved that she is the legal representative of the original mortgagor Ramzan Ali. The original sale-deed of July 21, 1904, was not produced but a certified copy was produced. In this connection the learned Assistant Collector found that the evidence regarding the loss of the original document was not satisfactory and refused to admit the copy as secondary evidence. On the second question whether the plaintiff was an agriculturist or not, the learned Assistant Collector recorded a finding against the plaintiff holding that she was not an agriculturist within the meaning of the Act.

The learned District Judge in appeal set aside the finding that the loss of the original document was not satisfactorily proved and presumed from the certified copy the genuineness of the original under s. 90 of the Indian Evi. Act. In regard to the second point the learned District Judge held that as the property was admittedly in the possession of the mortgagee the plaintiff was liable to pay revenue for the property if she had possession of it. Upon this reasoning he held that the plaintiff was an agriculturist. He set aside the judgment of the trial Court and remanded the case to him for disposal according to law.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have come up in revision to this Court challenging the decision of the learned District Judge on both the points decided against them.

A preliminary objection has been raised on behalf of the plaintiff-opposite-party that this revision application is incompetent. Reference has been made in this connection to the provisions of s. 23 (2) of the Agri. Relief Act which lays down that no appeal shall lie from an appellate order under this section and to Ghulam Jilani v. Muhammad Hassan, (L. R. 29 I. A. 51) (1) Sardar Nihal Singh v. Ganesh Dass-Ram Gopal, (A. I. R. 1937 Oudh 124) (2) and Thakur Mahipal Singh v. Kamta Prasad, (1939 O. A. 760 F. B.) (3). To my mind the preliminary objection has no substance.

The last mentioned case is a decision of a Full Bench of this Court in which it was held with special reference to the provisions of s. (5) (2) of the Agri. Relief Act that no revision is entertainable against an appellate order refusing instalments under s. 5 of the Act. The case in Sardar Nihal Singh v.

(3) 1939 O. A. 760 (F. B.).

Ganesh Dass-Ram Gopal, (A. I. R. 1937 Oudh 124) (2), was followed in this Full Bench case. The decision of the Full Bench proceeded on the ground that the words "decision of the appellate Court shall be final" in s. 5 (2) of the Agri. Relief Act debarred not only a further appeal against it but prevented interference with it in revision. A reference was made to the provisions of ss. 23 and 30 (3) of the Agri. Relief Act in which the words used were that "no appeal shall lie from an appellate order passed under this section". The learned Judges constituting the Full Bench held that if the intention of the Legislature had been to bar only a second appeal they would have used in sub-s. (2) of s. 5 of the Act the same language which they used in ss. 23 and 30 (3) of the Agri. Relief Act. The decision of the Full Bench must, therefore, be confined to cases falling under s. 5 (2) of the Agri. Relief Act and must not be deemed to extend to cases under s. 23. It may be noted that ss. 12 and 23 are both included in Chap. III of the Agri. Relief Act, whereas s. 5 appears in Chap. II of the same Act.

As regards the decision in Ghulam Jilani v. Mohammad Hassan (L. R. 29 I. A., 51) (1) learned Counsel for the opposite party has relied on the provisions of para. 16 (2) of Sch. II of the Civil P. C. which lays down in the case of awards that no appeal lies except in so far as the decree may be in excess of, or not in accordance with, the award. In that case their Lordships of the Privy Council approved the view of Clark, J. that in the case of an award revision would be more objectionable than an appeal. Their Lordships emphasised that if an application in revision were admissible in a case like the present, the finality of any award would be open to question. That case, however has no application to a case arising out of proceedings for redemption under s. 12 of the Agri. Relief Act. The language of s. 23 of the Agri. Relief Act in my opinion does not divest this Court of the power of interference in revision if the case fulfils the requirements of s. 115 of the Civil P. C. As I shall show presently, the case before me is one in which the learned District Judge has acted illegally, or at least with material irregularity in his finding upon the principal question in the case as regards the right of the plaintiff to institute the suit for redemption.

The learned Judge has fallen into two errors, one of which is an error of fact and the other is an error of law. In his judgment he states that there were only two attesting witnesses of the sale deed and both were dead. As a matter of fact there are three attesting witnesses, Mukarram Husain, Aulad Ali and Jawwad Ali, and this was so stated by Abdul Hakim, the husband of the plaintiff. Mukarram Husain and Aulad Ali are admittedly dead. According to the un rebutted testimony of Abdul Ghani, a witness produced on behalf of the defendants, Jawwad Ali, who was closely related to him, was still alive. This point is however, not of very great importance. The question that really arises for determination is whether the learned District Judge was right in presuming the genuineness of the original sale deed under s. 90 of the Indian Evi. Act by the mere production of a certified copy of the sale deed. This point is now set at rest by a decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Basant Singh v. Brij Raj Saran Singh (1935 O. W. N., 759) (4) where it was held that s. 90 of the Evi. Act clearly requires the production to the Court of the particular document, in regard to which the Court may make the statutory presumption. If the document produced is a copy, admitted under s. 65 of the Act as secondary evidence and it is produced from proper custody and is over 30 years old, then the signatures authenticating the copy may be presumed to be genuine but the Court is not entitled to presume the genuineness of the original. According to the aforesaid decision the certified copy of the sale deed produced in the case is admissible under s. 65 of the Indian Evi. Act as secondary evidence of the original which means only this that it is a correct copy of the original document, but whether the original document was a genuine document is a question which is capable of proof and it is not permissible to invoke the assistance of s. 90 of the Evi. Act to prove the genuineness of the original by the production of the certified copy. As regards the case in Seethayya v. Subramany Somayajulu (L. R. 56 I. A. 146) (5), relied upon on behalf of the opposite party their Lordships referred to that case in 1935 O. W. N., 759. (4) and explained that in that case the dispute was as to the terms of a grant, which had admittedly been made. The case in Shahzadi Begam v. Secretary of State for India (I. L. R. 34 Cal. 1059 P. C.) (6) cited by the opposite party has no bearing on the present case. There was no question of any presumption under s. 90 of the Indian Evi. Act which was not even referred to in the judgment. One of the two documents in that case was admitted in the trial Court without any objection while the other document was accepted as genuine upon the evidence produced in that case. The case in Brij Kishore v. Beni Pershad (A. I. R. 1929 Oudh 483) (2) (7) decided by a single Judge of this Court is no longer good law in view of the latest pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council. In this view of the matter there is no legal basis whatever for the finding arrived at by the lower Appellate Court upon the genuineness of the original sale deed on the basis of which the plaintiff sought redemption. The decision of the learned District Judge upon this point cannot therefore be sustained and must be set aside.

In view of the decision at which I have arrived upon the principal question in the case the plaintiff is at once non-suited and has no right to maintain the suit for redemption. This finding renders it wholly unnecessary to pursue the second point raised on behalf of the defendants-applicants.

The result therefore, is that this application succeeds the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the suit is dismissed with costs throughout.

is no fixed rule that a Judge should summarise separately the evidence against each accused:

Held, however, on facts that such a slight misdirection, did not prejudice the accused, specially when he himself had confessed about having committed the theft and the stolen goods were in consequence recovered from him.

Confession before Police leading to discovery of articles which are the subject of theft is clearly admissible under s. 27 of the Evi. Act.

Judgment.—Fourteen men were charged by the Sessions Judge of Trichinopoly with being members of a gang associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery an offence punishable under s. 401, of the I. P. C. Of these fourteen accused, four have been acquitted. The remaining accused were sentenced each to two years rigorous imprisonment. Of these ten accused convicted five are here appealing. They are accused Nos. 3, 7, 8, 12 and 13. Most of the accused are Ambalagars a community connected with the Kallars and Maravars. Accused Nos. 1 to 3 are Pallas, accused No. 9, who has been convicted is a goldsmith. The eighth accused is a Brahmin. The main argument with regard to the eighth accused is that there is very little evidence of association with the gang apart from the evidence of P. W. No. 1, an approver. The reason for this seems to be that this accused contributed more towards the organisation of the gang than to the execution of the individual acts of theft or robbery. P. W. No. 1 says that this accused did not actually take part in any of the thefts or robberies. However, there is a not considerable body of other evidence against this accused. He made a confession proving that he was connected with this gang in a particular theft and certain articles of clothing were recovered from him in consequence of this confession. It has been argued that this confession is not admissible; but as it led to the discovery of articles which were the subject of theft it is clearly admissible under s. 27, of the Evi. Act. Two other witnesses P. Ws. Nos. 3 and 5, have spoken to his association with other members of the gang and P. Ws. Nos. 11, 12 and 28, have also spoken against him. As a Brahmin and a mirasdar, his habitual association with persons of evil repute is itself a matter of suspicion, and he has given no satisfactory explanation of his association with such persons. In fact he denies it. Although the learned Judge did not marshal the evidence against this accused, it is not likely the jury overlooked the particulars of evidence against this accused. A slight misdirection was given to the jury as far as this accused is concerned with regard to a theft which had taken place and a fortnight or so before the recovery of property from him, in which the learned Judge said that this recovery indicated that this accused had taken part in the theft. The learned Judge did not indicate the alternative that the accused might have been a receiver of stolen property; but in view of the accused's own confession I do not think that this misdirection is a serious one. I agree that the learned Judge should have concluded his charge with a summary of the evidence against each accused, so that the jury should be quite clear in their minds what evidence there was against each of them. A considerable body of evidence was let in and there was a danger that the jury should decide by general impressions rather than by a memory of the actual facts proved in the evidence. However, as far as this particular accused is concerned, there is no reason to think that even if the charge had not been subject to this defect the jury would have acquitted him.

The third, seventh, twelfth and thirteenth accused made no confessions of their guilt as so many others of the accused did, nor was any property recovered from their possession. The evidence of P. W. No. 1 was corroborated, therefore, only by the evidence of certain witnesses, who speak of these persons associating at Shandies or toddy shops. In the case of the other accused, four persons have spoken best association with other members of the gang on various occasions, three persons have spoken to the association of the twelfth accused and two witnesses each to the presence of the seventh and thirteenth accused in assemblies of members of the gang. There is no fixed rule that a Judge should summarise separately the evidence against each accused and the learned Sessions Judge here has analysed the evidence of each witness fairly; but clearly he should have done so. It is difficult to know what effect such a marshalling of evidence would have had on the minds of jury; but if it had been pointed out how weak the evidence was against the seventh, twelfth and thirteenth accused, they might well have been found to be not guilty. The evidence of two witnesses who speak against the seventh and thirteenth accused is rather vague. The evidence against the twelfth accused is the same as that against the seventh and thirteenth accused except for the addition of the evidence of P. W. No. 4, which, the learned Judge told the jury, was unworthy of acceptance. Ordinarily, if an omission of this sort takes place, one would remit the case for fresh trial, but as the evidence against these three accused is so slight, I do not think it is in the interests of justice to subject them to fresh trial.

I therefore allow the appeals of the seventh twelfth, and thirteenth accused, set aside their convictions, and cancel their bail bonds. The convictions and sentences of the other accused are confirmed and their appeals dismissed.

N.-D.

Order accordingly.

Mst. ABIDA AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS

Second appeal—Finding of fact—Easement of necessity—Lower Court not appreciating what easement of necessity is—Court in second appeal can find whether such easement exists.

Where the lower Court did not fully appreciate what an easement of necessity is, its finding on the question is not binding in second appeal and so the Court can find in second appeal whether such an easement exists.

S. C. A. against the order of the Sessions and Civil Judge of Lucknow, dated December 7, 1937.

Mr. H. H. Zaidi holding brief of Mr. Haider Husain, for the Appellant.

Messrs. L. S. Misra and Ali Raza, for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant for the opening of a passage alleged to have been closed by the respondent Mst. Abida Begam.

One Mst. Ramzani Begam had three sons, Ghulam Husain, Ulfat Husain and Hasan Bahadur plaintiff, and a daughter Akhtari Begam. Akhtari Begam died leaving four sons, Ghulam Raza, Baqar Raza, Qazim Raza and Ali Raza. Mst. Ramzani Begam and her sons, Ulfat Husain and Ghulam Husain, executed a mortgage-deed of a house and a bawarchi khana on October 2, 1906, in favour of Lala Girdhari Lal. Lala Girdhari Lal brought a suit on his mortgage and obtained a preliminary decree for sale on October 5, 1931, which was made final on May 11, 1932. He applied for execution of the decree and purchased the house on November 30, 1932. On October 10, 1932 Lala Girdhari Lal applied for the amendment of his plaint and decree and wanted to include the bawarchi khana also. That application was withdrawn on December 17, 1932. He again applied for the same amendment on January 4, 1933, but that application was filed on March 27, 1933. He applied for a third time for the same relief on April 8, 1933, and that application was allowed on December 19, 1933. One of the judgment-debtors, Qazim Raza, came up to the Chief Court for revision, and a compromise was made between him and Lala Girdhari Lal in this Court. The compromise was to the effect that:

"If Qazim Raza Khan pays into Court the sum of Rs. 200 for payment to the decree-holders within six weeks from January 11, 1935, the decree-holders opposite parties shall give up their claims to the house known as bawarchi khana and the applicant, that is Qazim Raza shall close the door 'VX' marked in red ink by the Hon'ble Court in the map attached to the decree, so as to close the right of ingress and egress through it," and this amount of Rs. 200 was paid. The plaintiff was a judgment-debtor, but he had acquiesced in the order of the Court allowing the amendment and had not joined with Qazim Raza Khan in taking the matter to the Chief Court. Lala Girdhari Lal sold the house purchased by him to the respondent Mst. Abida Begam. The plaintiff as one of the co-owners of the bawarchi khana brought the present suit on the allegation that he had been using the door VX for ingress and egress and that was the only outlet from bawarchi khana. He claimed the opening of the door which had been closed under the compromise. That door is between the bawarchi khana and the house of Mst. Abida Begam which she has purchased from Lala Girdhari Lal. The learned Munsif framed the following issues—

(1) Has the plaintiff a right of easement to pass through the door and the court-yard of the defendant's house?

(2) Was the door closed more than two years ago as alleged? If so what is the effect thereof?

(3) Is the suit barred by s. 11 Civil P. C.?

(4) Is the plaintiff estopped from bringing the suit?

(5) Are the defendants protected by s. 41 of the T. P. Act?

The other three issues are not material. He came to the finding that the plaintiff has not acquired a right of easement by user, but that he had a right of necessity and that the suit was not barred by time. The plea of res judicata was not pressed before him, and he held that the plaintiff's suit was not barred by the principle of estoppel or by s. 41 of the T. P. Act. He allowed a passage to the plaintiff from the bawarchi khana. There was an appeal to the learned District Judge and he held that the plaintiff had failed to prove that he had an easement of necessity. He, therefore, allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff has come up in second appeal.

It has been decided by both the Courts below that the plaintiff has not acquired any right of easement by user. It has been argued before me that the plaintiff has got an easement of necessity. It is contended on behalf of the respondents that this case of necessity was not step in the pleadings. It was stated in para. 4 of the plaint that the door and the passage in question were very old and were in existence since a long time and that was the only passage from the house known as bawarchi khana. Both the Courts below appeared to have thought that the plaintiff had claimed an easement of necessity. I do not think that the question of the easement of necessity was not raised by the plaintiff. The learned Munsif held that the bawarchi khana was surrounded on all sides by houses. The plan on the file which was before this Court in the revision case filed by Qazim Raza Khan against the amendment allowed by the lower Court shows that to the north and east of the bawarchi khana is the house of Mustafa Husain, to the west is the house of Mst. Abida Begam, and to the south is the house of Akhtari Begam one of the daughters of Mst. Ramzani Begam. The learned Munsif held that the report of the Commissioner appointed in the case of Lala Girdhari Lal showed that there was an opening in the wall between the bawarchi khana and the house of Akhtari Begam but it was blocked, and there being no other passage from the bawarchi khana excepting that in question, the plaintiff was entitled to use it. The learned Civil Judge held that it was not proved that the opening in the wall between the bawarchi khana and the house of Akhtari Begam was blocked, and it was proved by the defendants' evidence that the bawarchi khana was used as a kitchen both for the house of defendant No. 2 and the house of Akhtari Begam. He also held that the door in the wall between the bawarchi khana and Akhtari Begam's house could be used by the plaintiff. He, therefore, dismissed the suit without deciding other points. I am bound to accept the finding of the learned Civil Judge that there was a door between the bawarchi khana and the house of Akhtari Begam, but under s. 13 (a) of the Indian Easements Act the plaintiff is entitled to get a way for enjoying his bawarchi khana. He is entitled to a way up to the public road and not to the house of Akhtari Begam. The finding of the learned Civil Judge is not that the plaintiff was entitled to go out to the public road through Akhtari Begam's house. As the bawarchi khana was the common kitchen of Akhtari Begam and the house now purchased by Mst. Abida Begam, it is just possible that the owner of the bawarchi khana may be entitled to go to Akhtari Begam's house and not further. If the bawarchi khana was used by Akhtari Begam it follows that she could go in it through a door in the wall between her house and the bawarchi khana but it does not necessarily follow from it that the owner of the bawarchi khana also could go to the Akhtari Begam's house through that door. I think the learned Civil Judge did not fully appreciate what an easement of necessity is, and so I can find in second appeal whether such an easement exists. When there is a house of Akhtari Begam to the south of bawarchi khana, it is for the defendant to establish that the plaintiff had a right to go through it to the public road. That right is not established only by the existence of a door between bawarchi khana and the Akhtari Begam's house. I think the plaintiff has got a right of necessity.

The learned Counsel for the respondents has argued that the plaintiff is estopped from maintaining the suit. His first argument is that there is evidence of the respondents' witness Qazim Husain that the compromise between Qazim Raza Khan and Lala Girdhari Lal was made with the plaintiff's consent. This witness is the agent of Lala Girdhari Lal, and I am not prepared to believe him. The other argument based on the evidence of Ramzan is that the plaintiff told defendant No. 2 Mst. Abida Begam, that there was no door between the bawarchi khana and the house that she was going to purchase. This witness was not believed by the learned Munsif and I agree with him. It is also argued that the plaintiff had not questioned the order allowing the amendment under which the bawarchi khana was also included in the decree for sale and Qazim Raza Khan alone appealed and got the bawarchi khana released, so the plaintiff is not entitled to maintain the suit. I think this argument has got no force. The plaintiff was bound by the amendment, but its effect was not to make Lala Girdhari Lal an owner of the bawarchi khana. Under the compromise the bawarchi khana was not given to Qazim Raza Khan alone but Lala Girdhari Lal admitted that he had no claim to it, so it became the property of all the original owners including the plaintiff. I think the plaintiff's claim is not barred by the principle of estoppel. It is argued that the plaintiff released the easement under s. 38 of the Indian Easements Act. Reliance is placed on the fact that the wall between the houses of Akhtari Begam and the bawarchi khana has been demolished. This does not amount to the release of the easement. I have already observed that I do not believe Ramzan who says that the plaintiff told defendant No. 2 before she purchased the house that there was no passage between the bawarchi khana and the house she was going to purchase. I think the easement has not been extinguished. I hold that the plaintiff has got an easement of necessity.

I, therefore, allow the appeal with costs throughout, set aside the judgment and decree of the learned Civil Judge and restore that of the learned Munsif.

Second Appeal No. 565 of 1935

Mst. KUNDANBAI AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 39, 100—Act, if exhaustive of all charges—S. 39, scope of—Whether deals with charges or right falling short of charge—Charge created by decree, if comes under s. 100—Charge—Charge created by decree—Its effect—Decree creating charge and further directing judgment-debtor to do particular thing and decree merely declaring charge—Difference—Transferee for value without notice of charge declared by decree, whether takes free of charge—Property subject to charge sold—Burden to prove want of notice—Decree merely declaring charge and not providing for its execution, whether operates as notice of charge—Estoppel—Estoppel by record—Essentials—Charge by decree—Registration of, necessity of—Practice—New plea—Plea of res judicata for first time in second appeal—Maintenance—Rate of, fixed in decree—Its alteration or variation, how obtained.

The T. P. Act, does not purport to be exhaustive but only to deal with certain specific matters, and also primarily it was enacted to deal with transfers by act of parties. Of course it does touch here and there on certain allied matters but in view of the very cursory manner in which they are dealt with as compared to the more exhaustive treatment accorded to private transfers of property, and in view of the preamble, the Act cannot be regarded as exhaustive when it deals with these allied topics which are foreign to its main purpose. [p. 864, col. 1.]

Section 39, T. P. Act does not deal with charges but with a right which falls short of a charge. The charge does not arise until it is fixed by a decree or by agreement or by operation of law. [p. 863, col. 2.]

When a decree declares a charge on certain property not only are the immediate parties to a decree bound by it but so also are all who claim through or under them and date their title from after the decree or the institution of the suit as the case may be, that is to say, not only are the parties bound but also their privies. One effect of this is that the question of notice does not ordinarily arise. 172 Ind. Cas. 949 (11), relied on. [p. 864, col. 1.]

If a Court orders a defendant to pay the plaintiff a certain sum of money on a specified date and directs that if it is not paid property which it specifies is to be sold, those orders must be carried out and the judgment-debtor cannot evade them by transferring the property so charged to another, however, innocent that other may be. The doctrine of estoppel by record applies. The doctrine of lis pendens may also apply in some cases, though not necessarily always. But whether lis pendens applies or not the doctrine of estoppel by record does. In such a case the transferee from the judgment-debtor after decree is bound to carry out its orders in the same way and to the same extent as the judgment-debtor himself. It is not necessary for the decree-holder to sue the transferee all over again. But when the decree is merely declaratory and does not direct the doing of a particular thing, that is to say, when it is not executable, then an important difference arises, and the transferee, though bound by the decision in the sense that it is res judicata, is not necessarily bound to the same extent and in the same way as the judgment-debtor: pleas are available to him which would not be available to his transferor. He is not estopped from putting in issue the consequences of that charge because that could not have been put in issue. [p. 864, col. 2; p. 865, col. 1.]

[Case-law discussed.]

Where a charge decree is merely declaratory and thus incapable of execution, the bona fide purchaser for value without notice takes free from the charge, the reason being that the legal estate prevails over a mere equity except where the legal owner takes with notice. Whitworth v. Gains (16), referred to.

Where a decree has declared a charge on certain property and that property is subsequently sold, the burden of proving want of notice of charge is on the purchaser. 142 Ind. Cas. 376 (28), Overruled.

When the decree provides for the payment of future maintenance and makes provision expressly or impliedly for its own execution, then it does not put an end to the suit and consequently whether the matter be placed on the ground of lis pendens or on that of estoppel by record (the two do not necessarily overlap) the result is the same. But when the decree is merely declaratory and inexecutable, the suit qua suit is at an end and then in our opinion these rules do not apply and the decree qua decree does not operate as notice of charge. Venkatesh Govind v. Maruti (29), relied on. [p. 870, col. 1.]

A provision should be made in India for the compulsory registration of charge decrees, whether declaratory or executable.

It is not any and every expression of opinion in a judgment which gives rise to the estoppel, nor can the actual decision be carried further than the circumstances warrant. In England the decision must be a final one: the matter must have been distinctly put in issue; and then only the precise point which was so put in issue and solemnly found against a party is deemed to have been finally decided for the purposes of this rule; and this is so in India as well under s. 11, Civil P. C. [p. 865, co. 2.]

The plea of res judicata is not a pure question of law and where the point was neither raised nor pleaded in either of the lower Courts it cannot be allowed in second appeal. [p. 871, col. 1.]

A written agreement for maintenance can be varied without the necessity of instituting a suit for that purpose. But the rule is different when the rate of maintenance is fixed in a decree. In such a case its alteration or variation can only be obtained by a separate suit properly framed for the purpose. 185 Ind. Cas. 580 (30), relied on. [ibid.]

S. A. from the appellate decree of the Court of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, dated August 31, 1935.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. B. Tare, for Respondent No. 1.

Mr. J. Sen, for Respondents Nos. 4 to 10.

Mr. Fida Hussain, for Respondent No. 3.

Judgment.—This judgment will govern S. A. No. 114/36 and S. A. No. 115/36, as well as this appeal (S. A. No. 565 of 1935). They all arise out of the same suit.

The plaintiff is the first respondent in all three appeals. On April 30, 1935, she obtained a decree for maintenance in Civil Suit No. 26 of 1894 against her husband's brother Shaligram. The decree so far as it is now relevant was in these terms:

"that defendant pay to plaintiff Rs. 250 a month or Rs. 3,000 annually for maintenance and also pay her Rs. 24,000 for arrears. The decretal amount shall be a charge on the ancestral estate in the defendant's possession....."

After this the plaintiff's maintenance again fell into arrears, so she attempted to obtain them by executing this decree. But she failed because the Court of the Judicial Commissioner held that the decree in so far as it related to future maintenance was only declaratory and so could not be executed. She was therefore, driven to filing fresh suits as arrears accrued from time to time. This suit is one of them.

The original defendants were four. Of them Shrinarayan and Mst. Savitribai were the legal representatives of the original judgment-debtor Shaligram. They were the first and second defendants respectively. The first was a son of Shaligram and the second the widow of another son. The other two defendants Nos. 3 and 4, are mortgagees of one of the family fields. The plaintiff asked that in the event of the amount claimed not being paid; this field together with two houses in the possession of the first and second defendants be sold because, according to her, this property was part of the ancestral family property and so was subject to the charge which she had obtained in the decree of 1895.

So far the suit was simple and straightforward, but complications set in when the third and fourth defendants insisted upon the joinder of a large number of other defendants. These other defendants were purchasers from time to time of portions of the family property which had been charged by the decree of 1895 after it had been passed. The third and fourth defendants stated that the properties in the possession of these others were also subject to the charge and, therefore, their presence was necessary in order to enable the equities to be adjusted. They protested against the attempt to saddle the whole burden of the claim upon the field in their possession and upon the two houses in possession of the first and second defendants. One of the questions in appeal is whether they (the third and fourth defendants) have the right to demand this.

They, (the third and fourth defendants) succeeded in having a large number of defendants joined in the first Court (16 of them bringing the total number of defendants upto 20), and in the end, after the plaintiff had been made to amend her plaint a decree was passed in her favour against the ancestral properties in the hands of defendants Nos. 1 to 8, 15 and 19.

All these newly added defendants, with the exception of the fifth, thereupon appealed and succeeded in persuading the lower Appellate Court to dismiss the claim against them and to have the properties of Jhadtalai, Chowkdi, Dolaria and Patnari, in which they were interested, released from the decree.

The plaintiff was content with this position and did not appeal; nor did the third and fifth defendants. But the fourth defendant has appealed and has raised these questions all over again. His appeal is S. A. No. 565 of 1935.

In the first Court another question was also raised. The third and fourth defendants claimed that they should be given the right of marshalling. In this they failed, so they appealed to the lower Appellate Court and failed there also. The fourth defendant has now appealed here against that decision and his appeal is S. A. No. 115/36. But his learned Counsel seeing that the contention was a hopeless one, abandoned it after a short discussion and told us that we need not trouble to write a formal judgment. That appeal will therefore be dismissed with costs.

The third appeal before us is by the second defendant Mst. Savitribai. She had asked in the lower Court to have the amount of maintenance payable by her under the previous decisions (fixed eventually at Rs. 200 a month though the original decree was for Rs. 250) reduced because of altered circumstances. She failed in both the lower Courts and has filed a second appeal here. Her appeal is S. A. No. 114/36.

Turning now to the fourth defendant's other appeal (S. A. No. 565/35, the one in which this judgment is being written), one of the questions raised was whether a defendant can compel a plaintiff to seek a decree against persons against whom she does not want to proceed. This question was raised before us as well but after a short preliminary discussion it was given up by the learned Counsel for the respondents Nos. 4-10 to this appeal, that is to say by the transferees who were subsequently joined at the instance of the 4th defendant.

That leaves us with a number of difficult questions of law, the first of which relates to the question of notice. The contention of these transferees is that they cannot be bound by any charge upon the properties which they have purchased unless it can be shown that they had notice of the charge at the date of the purchase. It will be necessary to decide the question of onus, but before we do so we will have to determine the legal category into which the charge in question here falls.

It was argued on the one side that it comes under s. 100 of the T. P. Act, and alternatively under s. 39. We do not think it falls under either.

Section 39 does not deal with charges but with a right which falls short of a charge. The charge does not arise until it is fixed by a decree or by agreement or by operation of law: See Ram Kunwar v. Ram Dei (1), Bharatpur State v. Gopal (2), Maina v.

Bachchi (3), Lakshman v. Satyabhamabai (4), Yamnabai v. Nanabhai (5), Sowbagia & Manicka (6), Jamnabhai v. Balakrishna (7), Fateh Ali Chaudri v. Gobardhan Prasad (8) and Kuloda Prasad v. Jageshwar (9). But apart from authority the differences between ss. 39 and 100 make this obvious.

As regards s. 100: in our opinion that cannot apply either though there is authority to the contrary. It is limited to charges created,

"by act of parties or by operation of law." A charge which is created by a decree is not created by act of parties, and we do not think that it can be said to have been created by operation of law.

B. B. Mitra thinks otherwise and relies on Gobinda Chandra v. Dwarka Nath (10) and Maina v. Bachchi (3) at p. 612 of the 9th Edition of his book on the T. P. Act. We do not think that either of these rulings goes to that length.

In both those cases the question for decision was whether a decree which creates a charge requires registration. That the learned Judges said depends upon whether a charge creates an interest in immovable property. They compared ss. 58 and 59 of the T. P. Act with s. 100 and came to the conclusion that the T. P. Act recognises a difference between a charge and a mortgage, and held that the difference lies in the fact that a charge does not create an interest in the property whereas a mortgage does. The learned Judges do not go on to hold that s. 100 is exhaustive of all charges and that one created by a decree falls within its ambit. We do not think that these decisions are authority for the proposition that charges created by decrees are ones which arise by operation of law.

We gather that Sir Dinshaw Mulla takes the same view as B. B. Mitra for he states at p. 546 of the 2nd Edition of his T. P. Act.

"Charges are created or arise in two ways and both are included in this section."

It is true he does not say that there is no other way and that he does not quote the case of a charge created by a decree as one of the illustrations of charges which arise by operation of law, but we gather that he considered that s. 100 was exhaustive of all charges. In any case that is the contention of the learned Counsel for the purchasers-defendants. He argues that if a charge of this kind does not fall under s. 100, then it cannot be a charge at all so far as India is concerned because the Act is exhaustive of all matters with which it deals.

We are unable to agree because it appears from the Preamble that the Act is one to "define and amend certain parts of the law relating to the transfer of property by act of parties."

It is clear then that the Act does not purport to be exhaustive but only to deal with certain specific matters, and also that primarily it was enacted to deal with transfers by act of parties. Of course it does touch here and thereon certain allied matters but in view of the very cursory manner in which they are dealt with as compared to the more exhaustive treatment accorded to private transfers of property, and in view of the Preamble, we are unable to regard the Act as exhaustive when it deals with these allied topics which are foreign to its main purpose.

It was argued that the omission was accidental and that in any event the principle underlying s. 100 would have to be applied to charges created by decrees even if the section itself did not apply. We are by no means certain that the omission was accidental. Decrees stand on a somewhat different footing and are governed by rules of their own, so it may well be that the intention of the Legislature was to leave decree out of the section.

The difference which the intervention of a decree makes is this: not only are the immediate parties to a decree bound by it but so also are all who claim through or under them and date their title from after the decree or the institution of the suit as the case may be, that is to say, not only are the parties bound but also their privies. One effect of this is that the question of notice does not ordinarily arise. This has recently been decided in Ahsan Hussain v. Maina (11).

But that does not solve the whole problem nor does that decision cover a case of this kind. The facts of that case have not been given fully in the I. L. R. report and unless the facts are studied closely the decision will appear to travel wider than was intended. The language of the judgment applies fully to the facts which arose there but unless modifications not necessary for decision of that case and which of course were not under consideration there are introduced for the purposes of this case a wrong conclusion will result.

The facts are to be found in Maina v. Ahsan Hussain (12), where the decision of Niyogi, J., which was confirmed on appeal is reported. They were as follows. Mainabai the plaintiff had obtained a decree against her husband which directed him to pay her a sum of Rs. 8 a month for her maintenance from the date of the institution of the suit on wards. At the same time a charge was created on the property described in the decree. This decree was dated September 11, 1928.

After this, on January 4, 1929, the husband mortgaged the charged property to a third party who took without notice of the charge. A suit was instituted on the mortgage in due course and a decree was passed against the husband and the mortgagee was placed in possession. The mortgagee thereupon sued the husband and Mainabai for a declaration that Mainabai's charge decree did not bind him. He failed, the Appellate Court holding that he was a privy of the husband and so was bound by the decree. The decision was based on the ground that the previous judgment in the maintenance case created an estoppel by record.

So far there is no substantial difference between that case and this but when we turn to the judgment of Niyogi, J. we find this important sentence:

"It would be preposterous if the Civil Courts are hampered in the execution of the decree passed by them by such alienations as that in the present case."

Therefore Mainabai's decree in that case was not merely declaratory. We are not able to gather its actual terms from the judgment but it seems clear that it must have contained a direction that in the event of the money not being paid it was to be recovered from the charged property. That is to say the decree was executable.

Now of course if a Court orders a defendant to pay the plaintiff a certain sum of money on a specified date and directs that if it is not paid property which it specifies is to be sold, those orders must be carried out and the judgment-debtor cannot evade them by transferring the property so charged to another however innocent that other may be. The doctrine of estoppel by record applies. The doctrine of lis pendens may also apply in some cases, though not necessarily. (12) 19 N L J 254; 169 Ind. Cas. 169; 9 R N 307.

sarily always. But whether lis pendens applies or not the doctrine of estoppel by record does.

This latter doctrine is a wide one which is to be found in the Indian Law under different heads. In so far as the narrow facts of that case are concerned, the particular branch applicable there is, in our opinion, to be found in O. II, r. 10, of the Civil P. C. It is true there is a difference of opinion on this point: some decisions have doubted whether the rule applies to execution proceedings, others hold that it does because r. 10 has not been excluded from the scope of execution by r. 12, whereas rr. 3, 4 and 8 have. But it is not necessary to decide that here though we are inclined as at present advised to the latter view. But whether the rule applies in terms or not it has never been doubted that an estoppel does arise in such a case and that the transferee from the judgment-debtor after decree is bound to carry out its orders in the same way and to the same extent as the judgment-debtor himself. It is not necessary for the decree-holder to sue the transferee all over again.

But when the decree is merely declaratory and does not direct the doing of a particular thing, that is to say, when it is not executable, then an important difference arises, and the transferee, though bound by the decision in the sense that it is res judicata, is not necessarily bound to the same extent and in the same way as the judgment-debtor: pleas are available to him which would not be available to his transferor. We think there is a wide difference between a decree which orders a person to do a particular thing and one which merely declares a certain state of facts to exist.

The doctrine of estoppel by record, as it obtains in England, is set out in the 13th Volume of Halsbury's Laws of England (Hailsham Edition). At p. 402 the learned authors point out that of the several matters included by Lord Coke under this head all are now obsolete except "that which appears on the records of the Courts of Law". As to these they state that the judgment must be a final one and they divide judgments of this kind into two categories, those in rem and those in personam, or as they prefer to put it, inter partes.

The judgment we are considering in the present case, namely, the one which created the charge, was not a judgment in rem but was one inter partes. We have therefore to see how far this doctrine of estoppel by record extends in the case of a judgment inter partes.

This is considered at pp. 438 and 409.

The most usual manner in which questions of estoppel have arisen on judgments inter partes has been where the defendant in an action raised a defence of res judicata, which he could do where former proceedings for the same cause of action by the same plaintiff had resulted in the defendant's favour, by pleading the former judgment by way of estoppel.....

But, provided a matter in issue is determined with certainty by the judgment, an estoppel may arise where a plea of res judicata could never be established; as where the same cause of action has never been put in suit."

The learned authors then continue to define the limitations of the under position:

"A party is precluded from contending the contrary of any precise point which, having been once distinctly put in issue, has been solemnly found against him. Though the objects of the first and second actions are different, the finding on a matter which came directly "(not collaterally or incidently)" in issue in the first action is conclusive in a second action between the same parties and their privies."

It will be seen then that the term res judicata is used in different senses in England and in India. What the English lawyers call res judicata, namely the rule which prevents a party from suing again on the same cause of action is dealt with in India by O. II, r. 2 (2), whereas what we term res judicata here is dealt with in England under that Branch of the law of estoppel by record which relates to judgments inter partes. But though the classification is different, the content and form are essentially the same, and the consequences which follow are the same. There may be a few minor differences, but if they exist they do not affect the essence of the rule. That being so, we are bound in India to look to our own rules as set forth in the Civil P. C.

But before doing so we stress that the limitations of the doctrine are as strict in England as they are here. On these points there is no difference between the two laws. It is not any and every expression of opinion in a judgment which gives rise to the estoppel, nor can the actual decision be carried further than the circumstances warrant. In England the decision must be a final one: the matter must have been distinctly put in issue; and then only the precise point which was so put in issue and solemnly found against a party is deemed to have been finally decided for the purposes of this rule; and this is so in India as well under s. 11.

Then at p. 412 of the 13th volume of Halsbury's Laws of England from which we have been quoting above, it is stated:

"The doctrine applies to all matters which existed at the time of the giving of the judgment, and which the party had an opportunity of bringing before the Court. But if there be matter subsequent which could not be brought before the Court at the time, the party is not estopped from raising it."

"The relevance of these references in the present case is this. The position of the subsequent transferee for value without notice was not and could not have been a matter in issue in the former suit which resulted in the charge decree upon which the plaintiff here founds. It is matter subsequent which could not have been brought before the Court at the time. Therefore in all cases where the decree is merely declaratory and cannot be executed, all that the transferee (who is a privy of the defendant in the former suit), is estopped from questioning is the fact of charge and the property to which it relates. He is not estopped from putting in issue here the consequences of that charge because that was never in issue before and could not have been put in issue. It was not matter which, to quote the provisions of Expln. IV to s. 11 of the Civil P.C.

"might and ought to have been made a ground of attack or defence in the former suit."

This rule of "might and ought" obtains in England also but of course it cannot be applied there any more than here to matters which could not have been placed in issue because they were not then in existence. See 13th volume of Halsbury's Laws of England (Hailsham Edition) p. 413.

We stress again that the position is different when the decree is one which can be executed. Then different questions arise and a different set of rules, still under the general head of estoppel by record but under a different branch of it come into play—namely those which state that in execution the orders of the Court cannot be challenged but must be obeyed and the directions in those orders faithfully carried out. If, however, the plaintiff does not trouble to ask for and obtain, or having asked for is unfortunate enough not to get, an executable decree, then he cannot ask to have rules which govern execution proceedings and are special to them applied to another branch of the law to which they do not belong.

That explains the difference between Ahsan Hussain v. Maina (11) and this case. But it is necessary to refer to another set of cases, because the learned Judges in Fateh Ali Chaudri v. Gobardhan Prasad (8) stated as a general proposition that:

"...There is a consensus of opinion in all High Courts in this country that where the right is charged on a specific immovable property either by decree or contract the subsequent transferee though for valuable consideration and without notice takes it subject to that charge."

Niyogi, J. repeated these observations in Maina v. Ahsan Hussain (12), the case which was under appeal in Ahsan Hussain v. Maina (14). With the utmost respect, not only do we think that the rule is too widely stated but we are unable to agree that there is any such general consensus of opinion.

In the first place, dealing with Fateh Ali Chaudri v. Gobardhan Prasad (8), itself, the decision is not based on the Indian decisions referred to in the judgment or on Indian Law but upon certain principles of English Law which the learned Judges hold are of general application and obtain in India as well. They quote passages from Ashburner on Equity and from Halsbury's Laws of England and also a passage from Kay, J.'s judgment in Madell v. Thomas & Co. (13) and then state:

"Under the English law, therefore the execution creditor buys subject to the liabilities created by the judgment-debtor prior to the sale. That being so, the question of notice is wholly immaterial."

"We have no doubt about that but what we feel, with respect, has been overlooked is that an execution creditor is not a purchaser and it is for that reason that the English Courts have held him bound.

The English rule arises out of a complex and technical situation into which we need not enter as the complexities have no application to India but the underlying principles upon which the English Courts proceed can be gathered from the following passages in the Lord Chancellor's judgment in Beavan v. Lord Osford (14). First of all he explains at p. 303* that in England certain judgments create a lien over the properties to which they relate because of 1 and 2 Vict. C. 110. At p. 305* he states:

"Now what did the legislature mean to do by that enactment? In the first place, they meant to make the judgment directly operate as a charge."

Then he continues at p. 306*:

"The effect is that they, (that is to say the persons we call decree-holders in India), have the same rights as they would have been entitled to in case the person had, by writing under his hand, agreed to charge the same."

We recognise that this is not authority for the proposition that a decree which creates a charge is on the same footing as a charge made by act of parties because the charge with which the learned Lord Chancellor was dealing was one created by statute and not by judgment; but at the same time it is not authority for the converse proposition. It is necessary however, to understand the English position because otherwise it becomes impossible to apply the English authorities aright.

Having made this clear we now proceed to other passages in the Lord Chancellor's judgment which deal directly with the matter which we are discussing. He was considering the position of the person who under a judgment (what we in India call a decree) passed subsequently to the one which under the law created the charge purchases the charged property. The Lord Chancellor refers to him as the judgment creditor and says :

"The question is, whether they (judgment creditors) are.....purchaser.....Is a judgment creditor a person who has purchased any part of the lands, or any rent, profit, or commodity in or out of the same? Now, independently of any authority, I confess I should have thought it was hardly arguable that a person who recovers a judgment is a purchaser. What judgment makes him a purchaser for valuable consideration? As was put by Lord Justice Knight Bruce in the course of the argument, suppose a judgment is recovered against a person in an action for assault, is he a purchaser of any land of the person who has assaulted him, for valuable consideration? Clearly not. He may be a purchaser, though he has a judgment, but he is not a purchaser by virtue of his judgment; it is something altogether foreign to the nature of a purchaser....The person who recovers a judgment may, indeed, eventually get at the land, because under the Statute of Westminster, he may take the land in execution, and therefore, he is said to have, even independently of the last statute, a lien on the land; but it is not by virtue of any purchase, but by virtue of the right which the law gives him".

Again at p. 304 * he says

"One cannot call a judgment creditor a purchaser, nor has such creditor any right to the land; he has neither jus in re nor jus ad rem."

Then he quotes Lord Eldon in Ex parte Knott (15).

"A mere judgment creditor, though he deals originally for a lien, does not get an estate originally in the land. He has neither jus in re nor jus ad rem,..... if he remains a mere judgment creditor, the Court says, he does not deal upon the faith of the land, in this sense, that he does not contract for an interest in the land, and therefore is entitled only as a judgment creditor to an eligit and he cannot tack."

Then he states his conclusion.

"He ((the judgment creditor)) is to be in the same predicament as if his debtor, in respect of any property over which he had absolute power of disposition, had executed a charge in his favour, and so given him an equitable right."

We will refer only to one more English case. In Whitworth v. Gaugain (16), Wigram V. C. said at p. 291†,

"Where the legal estate gets into the hands of a purchaser, for value, without notice of an equitable claim, that entirely supersedes the equitable claim; but it is clear, that, in the case of a trust, a judgment sued out will not have that effect. Newland v. Paynter was the case of furniture in a house in which a man and his wife lived. There had been a private agreement that it should be the wife's separate property. There was no trustee to protect the property. It was merely an agreement between the husband and the wife. A judgment creditor took the furniture in execution, upon which a bill was filed by the wife, and Lord Cottenham protected that property, and decided that the judgment creditor could not take it. That is a case showing as strongly as possible that, as against a judgment at law, this Court will protect equitable interests. If a mere judgment creditor, as distinguishable from a party acquiring property by conveyance without notice, could take it, there would very shortly be an end of the value of all trusts, and the creditors of a party might take the property of the cestui que trust."

It is we think clear from these quotations that the reason why the judgment creditor is bound by the charge, notice or no notice, is because he is not a purchaser and it is only the purchaser for value without notice who can claim exemption. With the utmost respect we feel that the English Law has been misunderstood in Fateh Ali Chaudri v. Gobardhan Prasad (8) and that the judgment which is founded on the assumption given at p. 178* namely that those observations apply not only to judgment creditors but also to purchasers, travels wider than the English authorities warrant.

Turning now to the Indian decisions upon which the learned Lucknow Judges and Niyogi, J. relied, the earliest decision quoted is Kuloda Prasad v. Jageshar (9). It appears from the recital of facts given on p. 195†, or so we gather from a passage which we shall quote, that the decree which created the charge was one which was executable and that the plaintiff was seeking to enforce the charge in execution and not by a separate suit. The passage to which we refer runs as follows :

"On appeal the Subordinate Judge also held that the decree obtained by the defendant being one for a declaration and fixing of monthly allowance, it would be executed whenever the amount might fall into arrears during her life time."

The judgment and report are both short and this is all that is said about the nature of the decree. If this was its nature, then, as we have already explained, we agree that the transferee would be bound.

The learned Judge also considered that the transferee had, or looking to the circumstances must be deemed to have had, notice of the charge, so the question before us here did not arise.

Then came Maina v. Bachchi (3). That decision proceeded on the assumptions (to be found at p. 659*) that a charge decree falls under s. 100 of the T. P. Act : that that section (the learned Judge—there was only one—was dealing with the section as it stood before the amendment) did not exempt the bona fide purchaser for value without notice (he reached this conclusion by comparing s. 100 with s. 40) : and that charges by act of parties require registration and that registration amounts to notice.

We have already stated that we do not agree that charge decrees can be said to fall under s. 100. And as to the second reason we do not think that that was ever the law and we consider that s. 100 was amended in order to make it clear that the opposite view, which had also been taken, was the right view. The reasoning of the learned Judge (there was only one) was general and applied to all charges whether created by act of parties or by operation of law.

As to the third argument advanced, with the utmost respect we are unable to see what relevance it had to the question at issue.

But it is to be observed that the learned Judge also stated that "I do not mean to say that there are no cases in which it would not be right and proper to apply the doctrine that a mere equitable claim will not be enforced against bona fide transferees for value without notice."

Again with respect we are unable to follow the reason upon which this qualification is grounded. If in the learned Judge's view s. 100 did not permit the transferee to raise such a plea, surely it must have applied in all cases and the Courts could not have been left with a discretion to apply or to omit the rule as they pleased.

As regards Mahadeo Prasad v. Anandi Lal (17) the decree creating the charge had been registered and the learned Judges held that considering that together with other facts which had been examined in the Court below the transferee must "be held to have had notice of the plaintiff's charge." That being so, again, the question did not arise but the learned Judges went on to say :

"This really concludes the case. But we may say that we are not disposed to differ from Sir Henry Richard's view in Maina v. Bachchi (3)."

They did not give the question any independent examination, nor did they say why they were disposed to agree with the earlier decision.

Another point of differentiation is that the charge decree there was an executable one (17) 47 A 90; 92 Ind. Cas. 348; A I R 1925 All. 60; 22 A L J 887.

and the question arose in a claim suit under O. XXI, r. 63, because in execution of the charge decree the Court had exempted the subsequent purchaser for value without notice. Had that case been before us we would have reached the same conclusion but not along the lines of Maina v. Bachchi (3).

In Bhoje Mahadev Parab v. Gangabai (18) the question also arose in execution and the learned Judges merely followed Kuloda Prasad v. Jageshar (9) without assigning any reasons of their own. Kallappa v. Balwant (19) did the same thing.

As regards Srinivasa Raghava Aiyangar v. Ranganatha Aiyangar (20) the charge there was created by a document, that is to say, by act of parties, and not by decree, and even at that one Judge considered that the document was a mortgage while the other thought it only created a charge. It was also held that the transferee had notice anyway. So the case has no possible application to the present one.

That leaves Hemlata Debi v. Bhowani Roy (21), which Niyogi, J. has quoted. But there the learned Judges merely followed Kuloda Prasad v. Jageshar (9), thinking, without analysing them, that the decisions in India on this point were all uniform. The distinction which we have drawn between executable decrees and those which are merely declaratory and incapable of execution was not considered.

It will be seen then when the decisions are analysed that most of them do not apply, and that of the two decisions which decide the point the one in Maina v. Bachchi (3), does so on a ground which we hardly think would be accepted as good law at the present day. The other v. Hemlata Debi v. Bhowani Roy (21), merely follows Kuloda Prasad v. Jageshar (9), which in our opinion relates to a different set of facts. Apart from those two rulings the only other decision which at all touches the point at issue is the obiter in Sarju Prasad v. Mangal Singh (22), where the learned Judges without giving any reasons state that they are not disposed to differ from the earlier Allahabad ruling. On this point we agree with the criticism which that learned author Sir Dinshaw Mulla has levelled against these cases in his T. P. Act, 2nd Edition, p. 550.

Turning now to the decree which forms the foundation of these proceedings the plaintiff in S. A. No. 565/35, Mst. Kundanbai, attempted, when arrears of maintenance had again accrued, to execute her charge decree but the Court of the Judicial Commissioner held that the decree was merely declaratory and was incapable of execution. The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner, therefore, quashed the execution proceedings and held they must be looked upon as a mere nullity. Mst. Kundanbai has in consequence been obliged to file a succession of fresh suits as arrears arose. That decision is res judicata and binds the parties as such. So it must be accepted in this case that Mst. Kundanbai's charge decree was merely declaratory and was incapable of execution. I did not order the judgment-debtor, so far as the charge was concerned, to do any particular thing.

We now have to determine what the effect of that decree is on property in the hands of a subsequent purchaser for value without notice. Applying the principles about estoppel by record to which we have referred and bearing in mind that the estoppel is restricted to the precise point put in issue and decided, or at the outside to a point which might and ought to have been raised, we can only conclude that the decree declared that the property was charged in the hands of the judgment-debtor in that suit and nothing more.

If that was all it declared, and we hold it to be so, then the ordinary law governing charges must obtain; and under that law the bona fide purchaser for value without notice takes free of the charge: the reason being that the legal estate prevails over a mere equity except when the legal owner takes with notice, "Even against a judgment at law the Court will protect equitable interests." Whitworth v. Gaugain (16).

This was not seriously contested and so all we need do in addition to referring to s. 100, which we think illustrates the general principle, is to refer to the following books: Story's Equity 3rd Edition, pp. 36, 154 and 167 to 169; Hanbury's Modern Equity, 2nd Edition, 29, 43 and 53; Halsbury's Laws of England (Hailsham Edition) Vol. 13, p. 92. To quote the striking and picturesque language of Hanbury,

"All equitable interests have this principle in common, that they fasten on the consciences of certain persons to whom the legal estate belongs. But they meet their Waterloo when the legal estate gets into the hands of one who has given value for the legal estate, and has no notice of their existence."

This bona fide purchaser is the bogey who frightens away all equitable interests alike."

The next question we have to consider is where the burden of proving notice, or the absence of it, lies. In our opinion it lies on the purchaser. To quote Hanbury again, p. 43,

"The defence of bona fide purchaser for value is an affirmative defence. In order to establish it a purchaser must show, in the word of Fry, J. In re Morgan (23), 'that he took all reasonable care and made inquiry, and that having taken care and made inquiry, he receives no notice of the trust which affected the property.'"

This is also the Indian Law and was so held by one of us in Renukabai v. Bheosan Hapsaji (24). We quote the following passage:

"That brings me to the question of notice. There is not much difficulty there. Whether the matter falls squarely within s. 100 or whether it comes under a more general rule of law, the burden is on the transferee to establish that he is a bona fide transferee for value without notice. This has been settled by their Lordships of the Privy Council in....."

Bhup Narain Singh v. Gokul Chand Mahton (25), where they quote a passage from an earlier ruling of the Board in Varden Seth Sam v. Luckpathy Rovjee Lallah (26).....

"As one who owns property subject to a charge can, in general, convey no title higher or more free than his own, it lies always on a succeeding owner to make out a case to defeat such prior charge."

To these rulings we may add Debendra Nath v. Lalit Krishna (27), and a decision of the Privy Council in Bhup Narain Singh v. Gokul Chand Mahton (25).

A contrary view was taken in Pannalal Jadam v. Narayan Rao (28). Grille, A.J.C., was of opinion that the amendment to s. 100 of the T. P. Act, settled the controversy on the question of notice which existed between the different High Courts and considered that the proviso throws the burden on the person seeking to enforce the charge. We are with respect unable to agree for the reasons we have given and overrule that decision.

That in our opinion settles the question except for this. It was contended that a decree in itself operates as notice. We do not think it does. This was decided in Venkatesh Govind v. Maruti (29), where the learned Judges quoting from Sugden on Vendors and Purchasers stated.

"Decrees are not notice to a purchaser, but the lis pendens is not terminated where the decree does not put an end to the suit."

That is also our view. When the decree provides for the payment of future maintenance and makes provision expressly or impliedly for its own execution, then it does not put an end to the suit and consequently whether the matter be placed on the ground of lis pendens or on that of estoppel by record (the two do not necessarily overlap) the result is the same. But when the decree is merely declaratory and inexecutable, the suit qua suit is at an end and then in our opinion these rules do not apply and the decree qua decree does not operate as notice.

That brings us to the individual cases of the various purchasers. The appeal we are considering is a second appeal and the question of notice is one of fact. Therefore, if there is positive evidence on record on which the finding of the lower Appellate Court can be based we cannot interfere. In so far as respondent No. 4 is concerned, his purchase was under Ex. 6-D1. Not only does the deed not refer to any prior charge but the recitals expressly state that there is none and the purchaser Ghasiram who has entered the box as 6 D. W. No. 1 swears that he made enquiries and sent agent to search the registration files but in spite of that he got no inkling of the charge. He has been believed by both the lower Courts. Therefore, the lower Appellate Court was right in releasing his property, 16 annas in Mouza Jhadtallai, from the decree.

We turn next to respondents No. 5 and 6. They are concerned with Mouza Doloria. They claim through a chain of transfers which commenced with a mortgage by the Court of Wards which had taken over the estate, dated January 5, 1901. The deed is Ex. 7 D-7 and Ex. 7 D-8 is the Commissioner's sanction. The mortgagee sued on the mortgage and obtained a decree for sale. Exhibit 7 D-3 is the judgment. The property was sold in execution and purchased by Pannalal and Jayaram. Exhibit 7 D-4 is the sale certificate and Ex. 7 D-5 is the receipt given by them acknowledging receipt of possession. These two then sold the property to Raja Laxminarayan by Ex. 7 D-6 and he in his turn sold to these two respondents.

(29) 12 B 217.

7 D. W. No. 1 is an agent of the original mortgagees, one of whom is the 7th defendant in this case. He swears that he made due enquiries about encumbrances from the then Manager of the Court of Wards and says that he was not told anything about a charge. He swears that his master purchased without knowledge or notice of any charge. The property was purchased at the auction for Rs. 19,150 as Ex. 7 D-4 shows, so it is clear that a substantial price was paid for it. This witness has also been believed, so this item, that is to say, 16 annas of Mouza Doloria excluding the cultivating rights in the sir (Ex. 7 D-7), was also rightly released.

The case of respondents Nos. 7, 8 and 9 is different. They are concerned with Mouza Chowkdi. In their case there is no evidence one way or other, therefore, as the burden of proof is on them, the property in their possession must be held to be subject to the charge.

That leaves outstanding the case of respondent No. 10. He is interested in Mouza Patnari. He has entered the box as 15 D. W. No. 1 and has been believed. He swears that he purchased without notice and that he paid the full price of the village. This village was also rightly released.

We do not know whether there were any other purchasers: at any rate none of them has appeared and so we are not called upon to consider their cases, if any. We say this because owing to some mistake Mr. Sen was shown as representing respondent No. 11 as well as respondents Nos. 4-10. He informs us that that is a mistake, so the only purchasers whose cases have been placed before us are the respondents Nos 4-10.

We now have left S. A. No. 114/36. The appellant there is the second defendant Mst. Savitribai, a successor by inheritance of the judgment-debtor Shaligram against whom the original charge decree was passed. She is one of the persons who now represents the family and states that owing to altered circumstances the maintenance payable should be reduced. The plaintiff objects and states that that cannot be done in this suit. She states that so long as her decree stands she is entitled to the sum mentioned in it. If the family want a reduction they must sue for that relief and obtain modification of the decree in a suit of their own. They also state that this matter is res judicata it having been so decided by the Judicial Commissioner's Court in a previous suit between the same parties. A copy of that judgment was filed as Ex. P-32.

Savitribai's learned Counsel replies that the plea of res judicata is not a pure plea of law and that as it was not pleaded or raised in the lower Courts it cannot be agitated here.

We find that the plea of res judicata was taken in respect of certain other matters but curiously enough not on this point though the First Court's judgment in the previous case was cited in Issue No. 3. That issue is wide and would have covered this plea if it had been taken. It runs:

"Whether any decisions in the said.....civil suit No. 4 of 1921 (this is the suit in question though the decision was given in appeal).....operate as res judicata in this suit and against which of the defendants?"

However it is clear that the point was not argued in either of the lower Courts, so we think it right not to allow the objection to be taken now.

But though the plea of res judicata was not raised, the point which is said to have been decided was taken clearly enough in the plaintiff's reply, dated August 6, 1930 para. 3, and even if the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner's Court is not used as res judicata, it can be used as a precedent on a question of law. In any case we have ourselves recently considered the matter at length in Trimbak v. Bhagubai (30) and have reached the same conclusion. As both sides relied on this decision it is necessary to set out the passages in the judgment which relate to variation of decrees.

We were dealing there with a written agreement for maintenance and came to the conclusion that such agreements could be varied without the necessity of instituting a suit for that purpose. But when analysing the various rulings we pointed out that the rule was different when the rate of maintenance was fixed in a decree. This is what we said:

"The decisions deal mainly with decrees and would appear to indicate a different rule, namely that unless a decree provides on the face of it machinery for its own alteration, variation can only be obtained by a separate suit properly framed for the purpose," with that opinion we still agree and nothing was shown us to the contrary. This appeal (S. A. No. 114/36) therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

The result then is as follows. S. A. No. 114/36 fails and is dismissed with costs. S. A. No. 115/36 also fails and is likewise dismissed with costs. A. S. No. 565/35 succeeds partially. As against the respondents Nos. 4, (30) 1939 N L J 409; 185 Ind. Cas. 580; A I R 1939 Nag. 249; 12 R N 159.

5, 6 and 10 (Ghasiram, Thakurlal, Nanhelal and Jagannathsingh) it fails and is dismissed. These respondents will be paid their costs by the appellant Ghasiram. As against the respondents Nos. 7, 8 and 9 (Champalal, Gangabishan and Sheonarayan) the appeal succeeds. But as the plaintiff asked for no relief against them in the beginning and as the plaintiff did not appeal against their exclusion from the decree, and as the appellant though insisting on their joinder does not want the question of contribution to be decided in this suit, we think it right that the costs of this appeal and of these three respondents in the lower Courts should be borne as incurred. These respondents will consequently be added to the decree and also the village in which they are interested, and the plaintiff's claim will be decreed as against them and their village as well. The same will be done as regards respondent No. 11 (Hazarilal). The order as to costs in his case will also be the same.

We desire to add that in our view the regrettable tangle which has occurred here is due to what we feel is the mistaken view taken by the late Judicial Commissioner's Court about the decree which created the charge. But that is beyond our power to remedy. The decision binds the parties. It is necessary however for us to state that as a matter of law we do not endorse that opinion in case our decision should be interpreted as authority to the contrary.

We also desire to state that it is our opinion that provision should be made in India for the compulsory registration of such decrees as in England. When the decree is declaratory it is unfair that the decreeholder should be deprived of the protection which he receives from the law which now states that registration is to operate as notice. On the other hand, when the decree is executable it is in the last degree unjust to the bona fide purchaser for value without notice who is then bound by the charge as a privy. If all decrees affecting immovable property were to be made compulsorily registrable, these difficulties and injustices would disappear. A person who purchased without searching the registers would then have no one but himself to blame.

Criminal Reference No. 5 of 1941

GHULAM HASAN, J.

DIWAN—COMPLAINANT—APPLICANT

versus

RAJA RAM AND OTHERS—ACCUSED

—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 258, 367—Order of acquittal should be incorporated in judgment—Criminal trial—Accused charged under ss. 325/149, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—Accused not convicted under these sections—Acquittal may be implied.

It is imperative that if in any case in which a charge has been framed the Magistrate finds the accused not guilty, he shall record an order of acquittal. The provisions of s. 258 (1), Criminal P. C., are mandatory. Mere mention of the fact of acquittal in an order-sheet is not enough. The order-sheet is no substitute for the judgment.

The fact that the accused have not been convicted under ss. 325/149 of the I. P. C., although charged may well be regarded as their implied acquittal of that offence although there is no express order to that effect. 111 Ind. Cas. 332 (1), relied on.

Cr. R. made by the Sessions Judge, Rae Bareli.

The Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Mr. Jagdish Shankar Pathak, for the Applicant Dewan, served.

Mr. Siraj Husain, for Opposite Parties Nos. 1 to 18.

Judgment.—Both the criminal reference and the criminal revision arise out of the same facts. They are as follows :—

Seventeen persons were convicted by a Special Magistrate of the First Class under ss. 323, 147 and 426 of the I. P. C., and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 10, Rs. 5 and Rs. 5 under the aforesaid sections separately. It appears from the order-sheet of the record that one Raja Ram, who was also one of the accused, was acquitted, although there is no mention whatever in the judgment passed by the Special Magistrate. All the 17 accused appealed, and the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Rae Bareli dismissed their appeal. The learned Additional Sessions Judge noted the fact that in his judgment the Special Magistrate had sentenced 16 accused only but it appears from the order-sheet that Bhagwan Bakhsh, one of the accused, had also been convicted. This accused had also appealed and his appeal had also been dismissed. The learned Additional Sessions Judge treated this as a mere irregularity and not an illegality. He noted the fact that there was no order of acquittal about Raja Ram accused but since the order-sheet mentioned that he had been acquitted, this also amounted to an irregularity and not an illegality. The learned Judge further expressed the opinion that the Magistrate had convicted the accused under s. 323 and not under s. 325 of the I. P. C., although the complainant Diwan had received grievous injury. As a revision by Diwan before the learned Sessions Judge for enhancement of the sentence was already pending, he declined to consider that question in appeal. He added, however, that the Special Magistrate had passed a lenient sentence.

The 17 accused filed a criminal revision in this Court on February 11, 1941, in which they referred to the fact that a reference had been made by the learned Sessions Judge to this Court on the application of Diwan for enhancement of sentences passed upon the applicants.

The learned Sessions Judge made a reference to this Court by his order dated January 22, 1941, which will now be considered along with revision application.

Briefly stated, the facts are that Diwan Pasi held a patta in respect of certain plots in village Bahadurpur from the Kapurthala estate, which was the original proprietor of this village, which was subsequently sold to Raja Ram. Diwan had a grove on these plots, it is stated, for a long time, and Raja Ram on acquiring the village attempted to dispossess him from the plots and challenged the genuineness of the patta granted to him by the Kapurthala estate. The prosecution case was that Diwan was working in his field on November 15, 1939, at about 10 or 11 A. M., when he was informed by his son, Sita Ram, that Padum Prasad and other applicants were cutting his trees. He hurried to the spot and found that the applicants were armed with lathis and some of them were cutting the trees. He remonstrated with the applicants whereupon Padum Prasad is alleged to have said that he was doing so under the orders of his master Raja Ram. Diwan was beaten by the applicants, along with certain co-sharers of his, who had arrived on the spot. Diwan received six injuries of which one was grievous and it was a fracture of the left ulna. The injuries received by the other members of his party were simple. Diwan made a report at Police Station Kotwali on November 15, 1939. On the same day Sital, one of the applicants, made a report against Diwan and certain other persons under s. 147 of the I. P. C.

The Police investigated both the complaints but channelled the applicants on the complaint of Diwan and did not proceed with the complaint of the opposite party. Although Diwan had received a grievous hurt the Special Magistrate convicted the applicants under s. 323 and not under s. 325 of the I. P. C. He stated in the beginning of his judgment that the applicants had been sent up for action under ss. 325, 147 and 526, I. P. C. The Special Magistrate committed the further irregularity of recording no order of conviction or acquittal in respect of Bhagwan Bakhsh and Raja Ram.

The learned Sessions Judge in his order of reference points out all these irregularities and further says that Raja Ram admittedly, according to the prosecution case, was not present at the time of the marpit and he could not be directly charged either under s. 323 or s. 147 or s. 426 of the I. P. C., but that upon the evidence produced in the case he should have been charged with the abetment of the offences of mischief and marpit. He also expressed the opinion that it was adequately proved that the offence of grievous hurt had been committed in the prosecution of the common object of an unlawful assembly and recommended to this Court that either the applicants should be convicted under ss. 325 and 149 of the I. P. C. or a re-trial for these offences should be ordered. In making a final recommendation to this Court he, however, recommended a re-trial of the accused Raja Ram for an offence of abetting and instigating hurt and mischief and a re-trial of the remaining accused for the offence of being members of an unlawful assembly, in prosecution of the common object of which grievous hurt was caused to Diwan Pasi under ss. 325 and 149 of the I. P. C. He added that the re-trial should include the offence under s. 426 of the I. P. C. as well.

The Special Magistrate in his explanation states that he forgot to observe in his judgment that Raja Ram was acquitted although the order-sheet of even date made it clear. He, however, admitted the error with regret.

I have heard arguments at some length in these cases, both on behalf of the applicants and the Crown. I have also heard Counsel for Diwan complainant. In my opinion there is no doubt whatever from a perusal of the record and the judgment of the Special Magistrate that the case has been completely mishandled. Under s. 258(1) of the Criminal P. C. it is imperative that if in any case in which a charge has been framed the Magistrate finds the accused not guilty, he shall record an order of acquittal. The provisions of this section are mandatory. It appears from the judgment of the Special Magistrate that they have been honoured more in breach than in observance. There is absolutely no order in his judgment either about the conviction or the acquittal of Raja Ram. The order-sheet to which the Special Magistrate refers is no substitute for the judgment. According to s. 367 (2) of the Criminal P. C. every judgment shall specify the offence (if any) of which, and the section of the I. P. C. or other law under which the accused is convicted, and the punishment to which he is sentenced. Under cl. (4) if it be a judgment of acquittal, it shall state the offence of which the accused is acquitted and direct that he be set at liberty. I regret to note that the judgment of the Special Magistrate discloses a flagrant disregard of the provisions of law contained in ss. 258 and 367 of the Criminal P. C. Similar observations apply to the case of Bhagwan Bakhsh about whom there is no order of conviction or acquittal in the judgment itself but there is a reference in the order-sheet.

The fact that the applicants have not been convicted under ss. 325/149 of the I. P. C. although charged may well be regarded as their implied acquittal of that offence although there is no express order to that effect, as held in Kishan Singh v. King-Emperor (L. R. 55 I. A. 390) (1) by their Lordships of the Privy Council.

Having regard to the fact that the case has been tried in a most perfunctory and unsatisfactory fashion and the record discloses a complete lack of appreciation of the essentials of the case, I consider it expedient in the interests of justice that this case should be re-tried by a stipendiary Magistrate. This will enable the applicants to put up a proper defence and to lead evidence in support thereof. Learned Counsel for the applicants has taken me through the record and has argued upon the merits of the case that the prosecution evidence must fail on its intrinsic weakness. He has also complained that his clients were not able to produce certain evidence which was essential to their case and they have been materially prejudiced by the action of the Special Magistrate. It is obviously undesirable for me to express any opinion on the merits of the case. I refrain from doing so. The Magistrate to whom this case is transferred will frame proper charges against the

I, therefore, accept the reference, allow the revision, quash the convictions and sentences of the seventeen applicants and order their retrial. July 12, 1940

NASIM ALI AND NARSING RAU, JJ.

LOKE NATH MUKERJEE AND OTHERS—

versus

ABANI NATH MUKHERJEE AND OTHERS

—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92—Question whether particular property appertains to public trust or whether trustee has been validly appointed or not, when can be determined in suit under s. 92—Mere assertion by trustee that trust properties are private properties whether sufficient ground for his removal—Library held trust for public purpose of charitable nature—Will—Construction—Principles—Intention of testator—Garden in compound of building is presumed to be for the benefit of all the occupants of the building in the absence of words allocating it to occupants of particular floor—Practice—Duty of Court—Appealable case—Court's opinion on all important issues must be recorded.

Mere declarations are outside the scope of s. 92 of the Civil P. C. But where reliefs contemplated by the section are claimed and such reliefs cannot be granted without the determination of the question whether a public trust exists or whether a particular property appertains to a public trust the Court in a suit under s. 92 can determine the question whether a public trust exists or a particular property appertains to such public trust. A suit for a mere declaration that a trustee has not been validly appointed may be outside the scope of s. 92. But in a suit under s. 92 the Court has to determine whether a trustee has been validly appointed or not if determination of such a question is necessary for giving reliefs claimed in the suit which properly come under that section. [p. 878, col. 1.]

Mere assertion in a suit under s. 92, by a trustee that trust properties are private properties is not by itself a sufficient ground for his removal. If he committed any breach of trust before the suit, his conduct in the course of the suit is an important element to be taken into consideration in deciding whether the breach should be condoned and he should be allowed to retain the office. [p. 879, col. 1.]

Where a testator in his will sets apart certain portion of his building for a library to be used by general public and dedicates part of his property for the upkeep of the library and appoints a committee for its management, the library is a trust for public purpose of a charitable nature within the meaning of s. 92.

The Court has no power to give effect to a hypothetical intention by supplying lacunæ in the will and thereby making a new will for the testator. The Court cannot speculate as to what the testator may suppose to have intended to write. The only intentions of the testator which the Court can carry out are intentions either expressly or impliedly expressed in the will. No indication of intention is sufficient to induce the Court to hold that a certain bequest has been made, unless, as a matter of fact, the bequest is made either expressly or by necessary implication in the will. Necessary implication does not mean natural necessity but so strong a possibility of intention, that a contrary intention cannot be supposed. Williamson v. Adam (2) and Crook v. Hill (3), relied on. [p. 880, col. 1.]

The natural presumption is that a garden in the compound of a building is intended for the benefit of all the occupants of the building, unless there are words allocating the whole of it to the occupants of some particular floor. Where there are no such words in the will the Courts are entitled to infer that the garden appertains to the whole building. [p. 882, col. 2.]

In appealable cases Courts are bound to record their opinion on all important issues. Tara Kant Banerjee v. Puddomoney Dossee (4) and 74 Ind. Cas. 906 (5), relied on.

A. from the original decree of the District Judge, Hooghly, dated October 6, 1934.

Mr. Atul Chandra Gupta, Dr. Kadha Binode Pal, Messrs. Apurbadhan Mukerjee, Bijan Behary Mitter and Robindra Kumar Goswami, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Hira Lal Chakravarti, Syamadas Bhattacharjee, Gopendra Nath Das and Sanat Kumar Chatterjee, for the Respondents.

Nasim Ali, J.—Babu Joy Kissen Mukherjee, a wealthy zamindar of Uttarpara, in the District of Hooghly, started at his own expense a public library for the use and benefit of the public of Uttarpara. There is a plot of land measuring about 3 bighas 2 cottas in Uttarpara. The river Ganges is on the east of this plot and the Grand Trunk Road is on its west. There are compound walls on the north, south and west with two gates on the Grand Trunk Road. There is a small strip of vacant land measuring about four chittaks between the northern portion of the western compound wall and the Grand Trunk Road. On the east there is a parapet on the buttress. There is a pucca ghat on the river bank inside the compound. Within this plot there is a big building. It consists of a basement and two storeys. There is a lawn (formerly a flower garden) to the east of this building. There are out-houses on the north and south within the compound. The library is now located in certain rooms in the first storey of the main building. The second storey is a baitakkhana. The servants of the library and the baitakkhana reside in the out-houses. Babu Joy Kissen was the owner of this land and the building thereon. On July 11, 1879 he made his last will. The provisions of his will relating to this property as these :

"Paragraph 12. I have caused a pucca two-storeyed building erected within a plot of land measuring about 3 bighas 2 cottas The public library rooms having been located in the ground floor of this building and the baitakkhana rooms having been located on the floor above, books are collected on the ground floor and newspapers and books, etc., are purchased from time to time and they are being read and used and shall be read and used by the general public according to special rules . . . Upon the demise of my eldest son Hara Mohan Mukherjee, the Malik of the said land and building, his son Rash Behari Mukherjee has become 'the holder of the right and possessor' (according to plaintiffs) or 'the owner and possessor' (according to defendants Nos. 1 and 2) of the said lands and buildings according to previous arrangement. God forbid, if at the time of his death he leaves no male child then his uterine Shib Narayan Mukherjee and 'on his death' (according to the plaintiffs) or 'in his default by death' (according to defendants Nos. 1 and 2) his eldest son 'in male line of succession' (according to plaintiffs) or 'generation after generation' (according to defendants Nos. 1 and 2) shall become 'the holder of the right and possessor' (according to the plaintiffs) or 'owner and possessor' (according to defendants Nos. 1 and 2) thereof. God forbid if there be no male child of my two said grandsons or of their (family) then my existing son Peary Mohan Mukherjee or his eldest son shall become the holder of the right and possessor (according to plaintiffs) 'owner and possessor' (according to defendants Nos. 1 and 2) and shall continue as such. But none of my heirs nor any other person shall have power to remove the public library from the ground floor or to transfer aforesaid land and building.

Paragraph 13.—Although my aforesaid grandson and his 'after taker' (according to plaintiffs) or heir (according to defendants Nos. 1 and 2) shall be 'right holder in succession' (according to plaintiffs) or 'owner in succession' (according to defendants Nos. 1 and 2) of the said land and building, the big hall, the room to the west thereof, five rooms to the north and south, the small circular room on the north-western corner together with the verandahs on the east and south and stairs to the ground on the east and west all situated on the ground-floor of the building shall appertain to the Public Library and the staircase on the south-western corner of the ground-floor and the spiral staircase which is situated outside on the northern side shall appertain to the baitakkhana above. The expenditure on account of purchasing newspapers, new books and instruments, salaries of officers, lighting charges, etc., all on account of the Library are being met and shall be met from the profit of the dedicated putni taluks specified afterwards in schedule marked 'Tha' and from the interest of Rs. 5,000. After keeping in view the income from the taluks dedicated to the Library and fixing the expense accordingly, appointment of officers, purchase of newspapers and books, etc., and other functions are being performed and shall be performed by a committee and shall not be performed by anybody else. Now my son Peary Mohan Mukherjee and my grandsons Rash Behari Mukherjee and Sib Narayan Mukherjee and my step-brother Naba Krishna Mukherjee and Monmatha Nath Chatterjee of this village and Chandra Sekhar Banerjee, husband of my youngest daughter, have been appointed by me to be members of the said committee. The number of members of the said committee shall never exceed six. Of them the eldest male heir of the family, of each of my sons and their heirs shall become a member. Having regard to this provision, if any of the aforesaid present resigns from his post or dies, a fit person according to the decision of the majority of members shall be appointed in the vacancy. A member shall continue to be such during his lifetime unless he resigns from his post on account of serious illness or old age or any other reason. All the work of the Library shall be conducted according to the opinion of the majority of the members of the committee, but if the committee be equally divided in their opinion, then my grandson Rash Behari Mukherjee and upon his demise his representative shall have the casting vote.

Paragraph 14.—The taluks which I have dedicated for the purpose of carrying on the expenses of this Library were settled in darpatni with my son Hara Mohan Mukherjee on a selami of Rs. 5,000. In order to discharge the liability of sadar rent of the mahals Govt. loan papers were purchased with the selami and kept in the custody of the said Hara Mohan Mukherjee, upon his demise the said Govt. loan papers shall now remain with Rash Behari Mukherji according to the provisions specified above, but except for discharging the liability of the rent of the aforesaid mahals he shall have no power to sell or make a gift of the said loan papers for any other reason.

Paragraph 15.—The members of the committee shall have no right to the rooms on the upper floor and the lower floor of the Library; my grandson Rash Behari Mukherjee shall have the right to these rooms but he shall have no power to sell them. The pucca kitchen, the stable and the rooms, for the durwans on the northern and southern side of the building are set apart for the residence of the servants of the Library and the servants of the baitakkhana on the floor above the Library. Rash Behari Mukherji or his representative shall meet from the Library funds the costs of repairing these rooms. The flower garden on the eastern side of the Library shall be under the management of the committee. The expenses on account of the garden and on account of the repairs of the Library rooms shall be met from the Library funds.

Paragraph 16.—Nobody shall have any objection if any of my heirs or their families organize dances, amusements, music, etc., in connection with any marriage ceremony or sradh ceremony or puja, etc., or hold any conference in the rooms on the floor above the Library. Everybody shall have equal right to hold these functions."

Babu Joy Kissen died in 1888. Rash Behari died in the year 1921 leaving no male issue. Shib Narayan died in the year 1923; defendant No. 1 is his eldest son. On June 14, 1928, defendant No. 1 executed a lease in favour of defendant No. 2, the son of Peary Mohan Mukherjee, of the entire land and the building for a term of 15 years. The material portion of this lease is this :

"According to the provisions contained in the will of late Joy Krishna Babu I am the sixteen annas owner of the Library building; only the Public Library is to occupy the middle floor of the said building and the servants of the Library are to put up in some portions of the out-houses. It is provided in the will that the repairing expenses of the out-houses and the middle floor would be met from the funds of the Library. After causing estimates to be prepared by competent engineers and contractors I find that a thorough repair of that building will cost Rs. 20,000 or Rs. 25,000. It being extremely inconvenient in my present circumstances to maintain that building by incurring such a large expense, I could not do the same up till now. Now, as you have agreed to give a thorough repair to that building at your own expense, I execute this document and agree and promise as follows : I grant you a rent free ijara settlement of the property described in the schedules, including the land underneath, building, compound, out-houses and all rights and interest for a term of 15 years from the date of this instrument..... You will have to incur large expenses for repairing that building so I fix no rent for the ijara..... The out-houses on the northern and southern portion of this property exclusive of their possession by the Public Library according to the provisions of the will of Joy Krishna Babu are included in this lease..... The sum that will be spent by you in making proper, i. e., 'thorough repairs' of this property shall be deemed to be the 'premium' for this lease, but the same not having been determined at present, I fix the same approximately at Rs. 25,000 (twenty-five thousand rupees), for the stamp of this instrument. Be it expressed that even if your costs for repairs or 'addition', 'alteration' and 'fittings connection' etc., exceed or fall short of Rs. 25,000 (twenty-five thousand rupees), the term of this lease shall not be more or less than 15 years and in the event of your desiring to purchase this property within the term of this lease and serving me with notice, I shall remain bound by the covenant to execute in your favour a kobala for out and out sale and free from incumbrances on receipt of a consideration of thirty-five thousand rupees. Be it further expressed that your total costs of repairs, 'addition, alteration' and indispensably necessary fittings connection' etc., must not be less than twenty thousand rupees..... Excluding from the said property the right of possession and enjoyment by the Uttarpara Public Library under the terms of the will executed on July 11, 1879 by the late Joy Krishna Mukherjee the rest of the property is the subject-matter of this instrument."

On July 30, 1931, the present suit was instituted by the three grandsons of Peary Mohan and six other residents of Uttarpara in the Court of the District Judge of Hooghly under s. 92, Civil P. C., with the sanction of the Collector of Hooghly. The allegations in the plaint, so far as they are material for the purposes of this appeal, are these : Babu Joy Krishna Mukherjee dedicated to the Uttarpara Public Library the properties mentioned in Sch. 'C' to the plaint, viz: (1) In the ground floor of the main building, big hall and the room to the west thereof, five rooms in the north and the south, small circular room at the north-western corner together with one storeyed verandahs on the south and the east and staircases leading to the ground floor on the east and the west ; (2) out-houses on the north and south of the main building ; (3) vacant land known as Phulbagan (flower garden measuring about one and half bighas, to the east of the said building ; (4) wall and masonry ghat on the bank of the Ganges.

He confirmed the said arrangement by the provisions made in cls. 12, 13, 14 and 15 of his last will. The persons named and described at the end of para. 12 of the said will, viz., Rash Behari Mukherjee and Shib Narayan Mukherjee, were but trustees, and at present defendant No. 1 is but a trustee holding these rooms, the flower garden and out-houses in trust and for the use and benefit of the Uttarpara Public Library. The said library is now in charge of the committee appointed in pursuance of cl. 13 of the said will and the principal and the pro forma defendants (defendants Nos. 1 to 6) are all members of the said committee. Defendant No. 1 is the president of the said committee. Under the terms of the will the members of the committee of management have been constituted trustees of the library and they are holding the properties of the said library including the properties described in Sch. C in trust for the library. The bathing ghat to the east of the flower garden appertains to the trust estate having been constructed from the said library funds. Defendant No. 1 taking advantage of his position of the trustee of the said premises on behalf of the said library and asserting his personal right to the entire premises including the flower garden and the bathing ghat has leased out the said premises with the underlying and adjoining lands including the aforesaid flower garden and the bathing ghat to defendant No. 2 for a term of 15 years by a patta dated June 14, 1928. There was absolutely no necessity for the said lease for the repair of the library rooms and out-houses, etc., as sufficient provision has been made therefor in the aforesaid will. The said ijara is null and void and not at all operative with regard to the library rooms, out-houses, flower garden and bathing ghat which appertain to the trust estate of the Uttarpara Public Library. A cloud has been thrown upon the rights of the Uttarpara Public Library by the recitals in the said ijara lease. It has therefore become necessary in the interests of the Library to remove this cloud by the institution of a suit for declaration of the rights of the Uttarpara Public Library as conferred by the will on a proper construction thereof and also for the removal of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 from their offices as members of the committee.

Prayers of the plaintiff in the plaint, so far as they are relevant for the purposes of the present appeal, are : (a) A declaration that the properties described in Sch. C to this plaint including the flower garden to the east of the library rooms and the bathing ghat to the west of the flower garden appertain to trust estate created in favour of the Uttarpara Public Library and that the trust properties cannot be alienated by defendant No. 1. (b) A declaration that the lease executed in favour of defendant No. 2 by de.

defendant No. 1 on June 14, 1928, is null and void regarding the properties described in Sch. C including the said flower garden. (c) Removal of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 from their office as members of the managing committee of the Uttarpara Public Library. (d) Appointment of members of the committee of management in their place. On September 2, 1931, defendant No. 4 filed a written statement supporting the plaintiffs. On October 6, 1931, defendant No. 2 resigned his membership of the managing committee of the library. Santanu Banerjee (son of the daughter of Rash Behary) was appointed in his place as a member of the committee by the other members of the managing committee.

On December 2, 1931, defendant No. 2 filed his written statement stating inter alia (1) that he has ceased to be one of the alleged trustees mentioned in the plaint and as such he is liable to be dismissed from the category of the defendants; (2) that he has been advised to state that no valid trust has been created by the will of Joy Kissen in favour of Uttarpara Public Library; (3) that one of the ground floor rooms of the premises were permitted to be used by the local people by the leave and license of Joy Kissen Mukherjee and his successors-in-interest as a reading room; (4) that the plaintiffs have got no right to use any portion of the said building by virtue of any right accruing to them or any of them on the basis of the alleged trust; (5) that the ijara lease in his favour is not null and void; (6) that with the knowledge, consent and acquiescence of the plaintiffs he has exercised his tenancy right with regard to the said premises and has caused thorough repairs to be done to the said building at a cost of over Rs. 50,000 as the said building was prior to such repairs in an utter state of disrepair and in a tottering condition; (7) that he has not committed any breach of trust.

On December 17, 1931, defendant No. 3 filed a written statement supporting the plaintiffs. On January 4, 1932, defendant No. 1 filed his written statement. His defence is in substance the same as that of defendant No. 2. On the same day defendants Nos. 5 and 6 filed their written statement. They state inter alia that they do not admit the validity or otherwise of the trust in favour of the Uttarpara Public Library, but they leave the determination of such question entirely to the Court. On November 17, 1932, plaintiffs filed an application before the District Judge for amendment of the plaint stating inter alia that they have come to know on the inspection of the account books, minute books etc., of the library several instances of mismanagement. Sixteen instances were specified in this petition out of which the following only were pressed by the plaintiffs against defendant No. 1 in this Court:

(a) That though properties mentioned in Sch. C of the plaint appertain to the trust estate defendant No. 1 asserted his personal right to them; (b) that the parcel of land lying to the west of the railings of the compound of the building and measuring 4 chittacks 10 sq. inches appertains to the trust estate of the Uttarpara Public Library and fetched an annual income of Rs. 150. Defendant No. 2 has evicted the tenants and has caused a loss to the trust estate. Defendant No. 1 acquiesced in it; (c) that the northern and southern out-houses appertaining to the trust estate used to be let out by the said committee at a monthly rent of Rs. 7. The contractors engaged by defendant No. 2 have evicted the tenants without any protest from defendant No. 1; (d) that defendant No. 1 was a party to the appointment of Santanu in place of defendant No. 2 as a member of the committee in contravention of the terms and provisions of Joy Kissen's will and there is no one on the committee at present representing the family of Peary Mohan Mukherjee, second son of the donor.

This petition was allowed and the plaint was amended. Santanu was added as defendant No. 7 in this suit. A prayer for declaration that his election was illegal and void was added. Schedule C of the plaint was amended by including in it the strip of land measuring 4 chittacks 10 sq. inches on the Grand Trunk Road outside the compound railings on the west. On January 8, 1934, defendant No. 1 filed an additional written statement stating inter alia :

(1) That the 4 chittacks of land to the west of the railings never belonged to the testator. It was not given to the library. (2) That the northern and southern out-houses were allowed to be used by the library servants under the terms of the will though not exclusive but jointly with the servants of the malik of the house. The northern out-houses were never let out and the letting out itself is an unauthorized act. When the repairs of the whole house including the library portion was taken up it was necessary that some of the contractor's men should remain on the spot, so they were allowed to occupy the southern out-houses. (3) That the appointment of defendant No. 7 as a member of the committee in place of defendant No. 2 is not in contravention of the terms and provisions of the will.

On January 8, 1934, defendant No. 7 filed his written statement stating that he has been validly appointed according to the terms of the will of Joy Kissen and that he cannot be removed under the present suit under s. 92 as he was not concerned with any of the acts alleged in the plaint or in the amending petition which have been done prior to his appointment. The suit was dismissed by the District Judge on October 6, 1934. Hence this appeal by the plaintiffs. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have also filed cross-objections against certain findings of the District Judge. Plaintiffs in this suit pray for a declaration that the properties mentioned in Sch. C to the plaint appertain to the trust estate executed in favour of the Uttarpara Public Library and that the election of defendant No. 7 as a member of the committee is illegal and void. The contention of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 is that such declaration cannot be given under s. 92, Civil P. C. Mere declarations are outside the scope of s. 92 of the Code. But where reliefs contemplated by the section are claimed and such reliefs cannot be granted without the determination of the question whether a public trust exists or whether a particular property appertains to a public trust the Court in a suit under s. 92 can determine the question whether a public trust exists or a particular property appertains to such public trust. A suit for a mere declaration that a trustee has not been validly appointed may be outside the scope of s. 92. But in a suit under s. 92 the Court has to determine whether a trustee has been validly appointed or not if determination of such a question is necessary for giving reliefs claimed in the suit which properly come under that section. That the library is a trust for a public purpose of a charitable nature within the meaning of s. 92, Civil P. C., is not disputed in this case. It is also an admitted fact that the defendants are trustees of this public trust within the meaning of this section.

In the trial Court plaintiffs prayed for the removal of all the defendants on various grounds. In this Court they abandoned their prayer for removal of defendants other than defendant No. 1, and pressed for the removal of only defendant No. 1 on the four grounds mentioned above, and also on an additional ground, viz., that he denied the trust altogether in his written statement and in his memorandum of cross-objections in this Court. The contention of the plaintiffs is that defendant No. 1 committed breach of trust by asserting his personal right in the properties mentioned in Sch. C of the plaint in the lease executed by him in favour of defendant No. 2 on June 14, 1928. There is no substance in this charge. The lease by defendant No. 1 expressly excludes from the lease the right of possession and enjoyment by the library under the terms of Joy Kissen's will of 1879. The case of the plaintiffs in this Court is that the parcel of land lying to the west of the railings of the compound of the building appertains to the trust estate of the Uttarpara Public Library and that defendant No. 1 committed breach of trust by his acquiescence in the eviction by defendant No. 2 of the tenants who were occupying certain shops on this strip of land constructed out of the library fund and were paying Rs. 150 annually as rent to the library. The District Judge has found that this narrow strip of land does not fall within the boundaries of the 3 bighas 2 cottas of land, mentioned in cl. 12 of Joy Kissen's will. He has further found that the library has no right to this strip of land. Plaintiffs' contention in this appeal with regard to this 4 chittaks of land is this. It falls within the boundaries of the 3 bighas 2 cottas of land.

After Babu Joy Kissen's death in the year 1888, the committee of the library built certain structures on this strip of land from the library fund with the approval and consent of Babu Rash Behari Mukherjee. These structures were let out as shops and the rent realized from the tenants thereof was utilized for the purposes of the library with the consent of Babu Rash Behari and his successors-in-interest till the year 1931. This narrow strip of land, therefore, has become a part of the library properties either by a grant from Rash Behari Mukherji or his successors-in-interest or by adverse possession for more than 12 years. Plaintiffs' case in the plaint is that the properties mentioned in Sch. C to the plaint were dedicated to the library by Babu Joy Kissen. This strip of land was not included in this schedule when the plaint was filed. It was included in this schedule when the plaint was amended on the basis of the petition filed by the plaintiffs on November 17, 1932. This case was abandoned by the plaintiffs in this Court. Plaintiffs' case in this Court, viz., that this narrow strip of land has become a part of the library properties either by grant from Rash Behari and his successors-in-interest or by adverse possession for more than 12 years is a new case and I cannot allow them to make this case at this stage as it involves questions of fact.

In this view of the matter, the decision on the question whether this strip of land falls within the boundaries of the premises in question is wholly unnecessary for the disposal of this suit. The finding of the District Judge on this question is, therefore, set aside and the question is left open. The shops on this strip of land were certain sheds which were attached to the compound wall. They were removed with the consent of all the members of the managing committee when defendant No. 2 effected thorough repairs of all the buildings and the compound walls in pursuance of the terms of the lease granted to him by defendant No. 1 in 1928 to 1931. Defendant No. 1 alone, therefore, cannot be held responsible for the removal of these shops. Plaintiffs have abandoned in this Court their prayer of removal of the other members of the managing committee on this ground. It is not disputed in this case that the library rooms have been thoroughly repaired at the expense of defendant No. 2. If the eviction of the tenants on this strip of land is not an act of breach of trust on the part of the other members of the managing committee it is difficult to see how it can be treated as a breach of trust on the part of defendant No. 1. Further, plaintiffs have failed in this case to substantiate their case in the plaint that this strip of land was dedicated to the library by Joy Kissen. Defendant No. 1 is not, therefore, liable to be removed on this ground.

The next charge urged against defendant No. 1 in this Court is that he acquiesced in the eviction by the contractors engaged by defendant No. 2 for the repair of the buildings of the tenants who had been occupying the southern out-houses appertaining to the trust estate and paying a monthly rent of Rs. 7 to the library. By the will of Joy Kissen all the out-houses were set apart for the residence of the servants of the baitakkhana and the library. Rash Behari and his successors-in-interest were directed to repair these out-houses out of the library fund. The library had not sufficient funds for repairing the library rooms or the out-houses. The contractors employed by defendant No. 2 required the southern out-houses for storing the materials for repair. The committee were, therefore, justified in allowing the contractors to occupy the southern out-houses. The plaintiffs have not pressed this charge against other members of the managing committee. In these circumstances I hold that defendant No. 1 is not liable to be removed on this ground. Mere assertion in a suit under s. 92, Civil P. C., by a trustee that trust properties are private properties is not by itself a sufficient ground for his removal. If he committed any breach of trust before the suit, his conduct in the course of the suit is an important element to be taken into consideration in deciding whether the breach should be condoned and he should be allowed to retain the office.

The provisions of Joy Kissen's will relating to the property have not been construed by any Court before. There is a statement in Joy Kissen's will that according to previous arrangement Hara Mohan had become the malik of the lands and buildings and after his death Rash Behari and his successors had acquired certain rights of ownership in the said land and buildings. Plaintiffs in their plaint stated that Babu Joy Kissen Mukherjee dedicated to the library the properties mentioned in Sch. C of the plaint and that he confirmed the said arrangement by his last will. The properties were mortgaged by Rash Behari on the footing that they were his absolute properties. On the basis of this mortgage the properties were sold and purchased by one Pramila Sundari Devi. On June 17, 1928, defendant No. 1 had to take a conveyance of this property from Pramila for a consideration of Rs. 2,000 apparently to put an end to the dispute. The rights of Rash Behari and his successors-in-interest to this property were not judicially determined before this litigation. Plaintiffs themselves have prayed for construction of the provisions of Joy Kissen's will relating to this property in the suit. Defendant No. 1 did not seriously dispute in the trial Court that the library had the right to use certain rooms in the ground floor and that its servants had the right to reside in the out-houses along with the servants of the baitakkhana. In this Court, the learned Advocate for defendant No. 1 did not challenge the finding of the District Judge that those rooms in the ground floor were dedicated to the use of the library and that the servants of the library have right to reside in the out-houses jointly with the servants of the baitakkhana. The construction of the provisions of the will relating to the flower garden is not free from difficulty. There are no express words in the will stating that the library would have the right to enjoy the amenities of this garden. In the absence of any express words it is not unnatural that doubts would arise regarding the right of the library to this garden.

Plaintiffs' contention is that the testator intended that the amenities of the flower garden would be enjoyed only by the library and this intention is implied in the last portion of para. 15 of Joy Kissen's will. The case of defendant No. 1 is that the testator's intention was that the amenities of the garden would be enjoyed only by Rash Behari and the other donees mentioned in cl. 12 of the will. A trust is created when the author of the trust indicates with reasonable certainty by any words or acts (a) an intention on his part to create that trust, (b) the purpose of the trust, (c) the beneficiary and (d) the trust property: see s. 6, Trust Act, Parma Nand v. Nihal Chand (1), at pp. 261-262. The Court has no power to give effect to a hypothetical intention by supplying lacunæ in the will and thereby making a new will for the testator. The Court cannot speculate as to what the testator may suppose to have intended to write. The only intention of the testator which the Court can carry out are intentions either expressly or impliedly expressed in the will. No indication of intention is sufficient to induce the Court to hold that a certain bequest has been made, unless, as a matter of fact, the bequest is made either expressly or by necessary implication in the will. Necessary implication does not mean natural necessity but so strong a possibility of intention, that a contrary intention cannot be supposed: Williamson v. Adam (2). This definition has been simplified by James, L. J. in Crook v. Hill (3), thus :

"The question then resolves itself into this : whether, having regard to the language of this will, guarding ourselves scrupulously against indulging in conjecture, or in an attempt to do what we think the testator would have done if he had been better informed or better advised, but taking into consideration the whole of the will, and the whole of the surrounding circumstances at the time the will was made, which are legitimately to be brought in for the purpose of explaining his expressions though not for the purpose of altering or adding to them, there is in this case so strong a probability of intention to include, or not to exclude the children in question, as that a contrary intention cannot be supposed."

By cl. 15 of the will the flower garden has been placed under the control or management of the managing committee of the library and they have been directed to maintain it out of the library fund. What is the implication of these provisions? The repairs of the library rooms and of the out-houses in which the library has some interest are to be effected out of the library fund. The flower garden adjoins the library rooms. At the same time, the baitakkhana is above the library rooms and although the out-houses are to be repaired out of the library fund, the servants of the baitakkhana have the right to reside in them jointly with the servants of the library. It can be therefore, said with reasonable certainty that the intention of the testator was that only the amenities of the flower garden would be enjoyed by the library as well as by Rash Behari and the other donees mentioned in cl. 12 of the will as a contrary intention cannot be reasonably supposed. Plaintiffs' contention is that the wall and the masonry ghat on the bank of the Ganges were dedicated to the library of Joy Kissen. Defendant No. 1 denies this. There is nothing in the will of Joy Kissen to show that the wall and the ghat were dedicated either expressly or by necessary implication. The mere fact that some steps of the masonry ghat and the wall were constructed out of the library fund by the library committee long after Joy Kissen's death is irrelevant to the question whether Joy Kissen intended to dedicate the wall and the ghat to the library.

The question whether defendant No. 7 has been validly appointed as a member of the managing committee of the library in place of defendant No. 2 arises for decision in this suit as the plaintiffs' allegation in this suit is that defendant No. 1 was a party to the election of defendant No. 7 in place of defendant No. 2 in contravention of the directions given in Joy Kissen's will.

The direction of the testator in para. 13 of the will is that the eldest male heir of each of his sons and their heirs shall be a member of the committee. He had three sons: Hara Mohan, Peary Mohan and Raj Mohan. At least three members of the committee, therefore, must be the three eldest male heirs of each of his sons and their heirs. Defendant No. 1 represents Hara Mohan's branch. Defendant No. 3 represents Raj Mohan's branch. Defendant No. 2 represented Peary Mohan's branch. After his resignation there is no representative of Peary Mohan's branch in the committee as defendant No. 7 is not a representative of Peary Mohan's branch. In the vacancy caused by the resignation of defendant No. 2, the committee should have appointed somebody from Peary Mohan's branch in accordance with the directions of the testator. The appointment of defendant No. 7 in place of defendant No. 2 is, therefore, invalid. But as this appointment was made by all the members of the committee and as the plaintiffs have abandoned this prayer for removal of the other members of the committee on this ground I am not prepared to remove defendant No. 1 on this ground. For the reasons given above, I hold that defendant No. 1 is not liable to be removed from his office as a member of the committee.

There was a dispute between the parties as to whether the 3 bighas 2 cottas of land with the buildings thereon and the four chittaks of land to the east of the Grand Trunk Road will revert on the death of defendant No. 1 to Joy Kissen's estate absolutely. The District Judge has held that this property will revert after the death of defendant No. 1 to Joy Kissen's estate absolutely. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have assailed this finding of the District Judge in their cross-objections. The decision on this question is not necessary for the disposal of this suit. The finding of the District Judge on this point is therefore set aside and the question is left open. The appellants and the respondents did not urge before us the other grounds taken in the memorandum of appeal and the cross-objections filed by them respectively in this Court. The result, therefore, is that the appeal and the cross-objections are allowed in part. The judgment and decree of the trial Judge are modified in the manner indicated above. Defendants Nos. 1 and 3 to 6 are directed to appoint a person in place of defendant No. 2 as a member of the managing committee of the library keeping in view the provisions contained in para. 13 of Joy Kissen's last will. In view of the facts and circumstances of this case we direct the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Narsing Rau, J.—I agree and would like to add a few words. The case concerns the Uttarpara Public Library, an endowment famous in Bengal and mentioned even in the Encyclopædia Britannica, which describes Uttarpara as "famous for the public library founded and endowed by Jai Krishna Mukherji, which is specially rich in books on local topography. (Edn. 11: See under Uttarpara)."

It appears from Ex. 245 that the founder conceived the idea of such a library as early as 1854 and actually established it in 1859, constructing a magnificent building for the purpose on the bank of the Hooghly and spending more than a lakh of rupees on books.

By certain provisions of his last will dated July 11, 1879 he set apart for the use of the library the greater part of the ground floor of this two storeyed building, some out-houses and also, it is contended by the plaintiffs, "a flower garden on the eastern side of the library." The main controversy in this appeal is, or at any rate, during most of the argument was, with regard to the flower garden. According to the plaintiffs appellants it is part of the trust property set apart for the use of the library; according to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 (who are amongst the respondents) it is not part of the trust property. It is not in dispute that the flower garden existed at the date of the will and continued to exist until about 1905, but the flowers have long since disappeared and what now remains is two grass plots with a passage in the middle leading down to the river. The relevant provisions of the will are contained in paras. 12, 13, 14 and 15. Paragraph 12 of the will, after referring to the two storeyed building, goes on to say (as translated in the District Judge's judgment):

"The public library rooms having been located on the ground floor of this building and the baitak-khana having been located on the floor above, books are collected on the ground floor and newspapers and books, etc., are purchased from time to time and they are being read and used and shall be read and used by the general public according to special rules."

Then comes a somewhat obscure and controversial provision which, according to one reading, gives the ownership of the land and the building to the testator's grandson Rash Benari Mukherjee and his heirs or successors; but it is provided that none of them shall have the right to remove the public library from the ground floor. Paragraph 13 provides that although the aforesaid grandson and his heirs or successors shall be the owners of the land and the building (the precise translation of this part of the paragraph is also disputed), certain room and verandahs on the ground floor are to "appertain" to the public library. Then follows a provision as to how the expenditure of the library is to be met. The testator then goes on to say that the library is to be administered by a committee of not more than six members including the eldest male heir in the line of each of the testator's sons. (of whom there were three). Paragraph 14 describes the property out of whose income the expenditure of the library is to be met. Paragraph 15 is in the following terms (as translated in the District Judge's judgment):

"The members of the committee shall have no right to the rooms on the upper floor and the lower floor of the library; my grandson Rash Behari Mukherjee shall have the right to these rooms but he shall have no power to sell them. The pucca kitchen, the stable and the rooms for the darwans on the northern and southern side of the building are set apart for the residence of the servants of the library and the servants of the bitakkhana on the floor above the library. Rash Behari Mukherjee or his representative shall meet from the library funds the cost of repairing these rooms. The flower garden on the eastern side of the library shall be under the management of the committee. The expenses on account of the garden and on account of the repairs of the library rooms shall be met from the library funds."

The Bengali word translated above as "management" is "kartritwa"; it is said on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants that a better rendering would be "control." It will thus be seen that the testator in express terms placed the flower garden under the control or management of the committee. It is common ground that the members of the committee are the trustees of the public library in the sense that the use of the ground floor rooms and verandahs vests in them for the benefit of the library, so that the position is that the flower garden has by the terms of the will been placed under the control or management of the trustees of the library. The question is whether it can be said to be part of the trust property. The main contention on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who are amongst the respondents in this appeal, is that the flower garden finds no place in para. 13 of the will, which describes the property "appertaining" to the public library. Accordingly, it is said the garden must be held not to "appertain" to the library. Further it is said, by virtue of the opening sentence of para. 13 of the will, the ownership of the land vests in the testator's grandson and his heirs. The result is that the ownership of the garden, unlike that of the property appropriated to the library under para. 13, vests in them without any subtraction as to use, and the garden cannot therefore form part of the trust property.

To my mind this argument is unconvincing. The most that can be inferred from the non-mention of the garden in para. 13 of the will, is that it does not appertain exclusively to the library, as do the ground floor rooms and verandahs mentioned in that paragraph; but it does not follow that the garden does not appertain jointly to the library and the baithakkhana. It is easy, and may often be necessary, to partition a building by floors and allocate one floor to one purpose and another floor to another purpose. This is what the testator has done in para. 13 of the will. But it is neither necessary nor convenient to make a corresponding partition of a garden in the compound of the building. It is therefore, not surprising that the testator did not attempt any such thing in the case of the flower garden. The natural presumption is that a garden in the compound of a building is intended for the benefit of all the occupants of the building, unless there are words allocating the whole of it to the occupants of some particular floor. There are no such words in the will and we are therefore, entitled to infer that the garden appertains both to the library and to the baithakkhana. There are several circumstances in the present case which support this view and which show that the library was not intended by the testator to be excluded from the amenities of the garden. In the first place it is obvious that when a garden in the compound of a public library is placed under the control or management of the library committee, that in itself is an indication of the founder's intention that the garden must be managed primarily for the benefit of the library. It would be contrary to all reason to suppose that after endowing a library of great distinction in an imposing building on one of the finest sites available in the locality, the founder, when he came to dispose of the garden immediately adjoining the building, disposed of it for the exclusive benefit of somebody else, notwithstanding the fact that he has expressly given the control or management of the garden to the library committee. A man who has not spared expense or effort in providing various special amenities can hardly have intended to exclude the library from the ordinary amenities of a garden. In the next place it is significant that the testator has expressly directed that the expenses of the management of the garden must be met from the library fund. In the third place, when we look to the actual use that has been made of the garden and its site, we find that the evidence is all one way, namely in favour of the library. It has already been mentioned that the flower garden has, for some reason or other, been allowed to disappear; on several occasions since its disappearance the site has been allowed to be used for other purposes. On two or three occasions, the committee went so far in their vandalism as to let it out to circuses and the like, but at no time have they ventured to appropriate the income arising from such use to any purpose save that of the library fund. Yet another piece of evidence is furnished by Ex. M (1), a lease granted by the founder in 1862 in which the western boundary of the land leased is described as "the land of the flower garden appertaining to the library." This was of course many years before his will of 1879; but no particular reason can be discovered for any change of intention on his part and as already pointed out, the indications are all the other way.

In view of all these circumstances, the conclusion seems irresistible that the garden was intended by the testator to appertain at least in part to the library and to my mind this intention has been indicated with reasonable certainty (to use the language of s. 6, Trusts Act) in the provisions of the will. The garden must therefore to that extent be regarded as part of the trust property. It is clear from the opening sentence of para. 13 of the will that what appertains to the library in respect of the ground floor rooms and verandahs is something less than the ownership, because otherwise there would be no meaning in describing the ownership as remaining with the testator's grandson and his heirs or successors. What appertains to the public library under para. 13 would therefore, appear to be only the use of the ground floor rooms and verandahs; and in my view, what appertains to the library by the implications of para. 15 is the joint use of the garden, the manner and extent of the use being regulated by the library committee in the exercise of the powers of control or management given to that committee by the aforesaid para. 15. Towards the conclusion of the argument, we were pressed by the Advocate for the respondents to leave open the question whether the flower garden is or is not part of the trust property. He urged that as there was admittedly a trust and as there was admittedly some trust property, it was unnecessary in the particular circumstances of the present case to decide whether the garden is or is not included in the trust property.

We cannot however ignore the fact that this particular question was a part of issue No. 7 framed by the trial Court. Evidence was produced upon it; the District Judge has recorded a finding (in the negative) in respect of it, and a large part of the argument before us was devoted to it. Moreover, we cannot tell what the findings upon the other issues may be, in the event of an appeal from the decision of this Court. It seems to me therefore that in accordance with the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Tara Kant Banerjee v. Puddomoney Dossee (4), at p. 488 repeated in Mahomed Sulaiman v. Birendra Chandra Singh (5), we are bound to record our opinion in this particular issue as on other important issues.

COMMITTEE OF MANAGEMENT FOR GURDWARA THAMJI SAHIB
PANCHVIN PADSHAHI AND GURDWARA
GANGSAR PANCHVIN PADSHAHI—
PLAINTIFF AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANT—

RESPONDENTS.

Punjab Court of Wards Act (II of 1903), s. 19—Suit against ward for declaration that plaintiff is entitled to muafidari rights in lands owned by ward—Rights neither vesting in ward nor under superintendence of Court of Wards—Notice under s. 19, if necessary—Suit under s. 25-A, Sikh Gurdwaras Act (VIII of 1925), against ward in respect of rights in property belonging to ward—Entire property under superintendence of Court of Wards—Notice under s. 19, if essential—Sikh Gurdwaras Act (VIII of 1925), ss. 8, 10—Power of tribunal under s. 8—Whether can adjudicate of right, title and interest of Gurdwara in property mentioned in list under s. 7 (3) of Act.

In a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to muafidari rights in land owned by a ward, when the muafidari rights do not vest in the ward nor are they under the superintendence of the Court of Wards, no notice under s. 19, Punjab Court of Wards Act is necessary.

Where a tribunal declares a well and two cisterns to belong to a ward (Guru) subject to certain rights therein in favour of the public, and subsequently a suit is brought against the ward under s. 25-A, Gurdwaras Act, in respect of these rights and the entire property of the ward is under the superintendence of the Court of Wards, a notice under s. 19, Punjab Court of Wards Act is necessary. 63 Ind. Cas. 606 (1), distinguished.

Under s. 8, Sikh Gurdwaras Act, the tribunal has only to determine the nature and character of the institution and not to adjudicate upon the right, title or interest of the Gurdwara in the properties mentioned in the consolidated list published under s. 7 (3) of the Gurdwaras Act. That is a matter which has to be decided in proceedings on the petition under s. 10. The remarks of the tribunal in its judgment and decree under s. 8 regarding the right, title and interest of the Gurdwara in the properties mentioned in the consolidated list must be regarded as obiter and have, therefore, no legal effect as against the declaration of rights as embodied in the decree under s. 10. [p. 886, col. 2.]

F. A. from the decree of the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal, Lahore, dated July 12, 1939.

Messrs. Achhru Ram and J. N. Talwar, for the Appellant.

Sardar Harnam Singh, for the Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—This is an appeal from the decree passed by the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal under s. 35-A, Sikh Gurdwaras Act, in favour of the Committee of Management of Gurdwara Thamji Sahib Panchvin Padshahi and Gurdwara Gangsar at Kartarpur, District Jullundur (respondent No. 1) against Guru Amarjit Singh through the Court of Wards (appellant) and Hira Singh (respondent No. 2) for possession of certain properties. On September 12, 1926, a petition under s. 7, Sikh Gurdwaras Act, was presented to the Provincial Govt. by 82 Sikhs praying that Gurdwara Gangsar Panchvin Padshahi situate at Kartarpur, District Jullundur, be declared to be a Sikh Gurdwara. The petition was accompanied by a list containing a description of the immovable properties, inclusive of the Gurdwara and certain muafi rights, which the petitioners claimed to belong to the Gurdwara. This petition with the accompanying list was published in the Punjab Govt. Gazette, dated August 30, 1930, (Notification No. 234/628-G). Within ninety days from the date of the publication of the notification, a petition under s. 8 was presented by Guru Amarjit Singh minor through the Court of Wards, claiming that Gurdwara Gangsar was not a Sikh Gurdwara. Another petition under s. 10 was also presented by the Guru through the Court of Wards, denying that the properties mentioned in the consolidated list belonged to the Gurdwara and alleging that they belonged to him. The Provincial Govt., in due course, forwarded the petitions to the Sikh Gurdwara's tribunal. The tribunal first tried the petition under s. 8 and, on January 19, 1934, gave judgment declaring that Gurdwara Gangsar was a Sikh Gurdwara as defined in the Act. The decree embodying the declaration also stated that "the said Gurdwara includes the well with 'two bathing places' and the room and verandah in which Granth Sahib is opened. It does not include the Shivala."

From this decree Guru Amarjit Singh through the Court of Wards appealed to this Court, but the appeal was dismissed and the decree of the tribunal affirmed on November 28, 1934. The tribunal then took up the trial of the petition under s. 10 and on February 28, 1935 it passed a decree in favour of Guru Amarjit Singh through the Court of Wards, declaring :

"(1) That the Gangsar well and its two cisterns and the site round about it, i. e., the whole of the site shown on the notification plan lying in khassra Nos. 4016 and 4008 belong to the Guru who has the right to irrigate the Moti Bagh and to fill the Indersar tank with waters of the well. At the same time the public have the right to bathe in the waters of this well and to worship it and to worship at the Chabutra Kham marked A and room for Granth Sahib marked B on the notification plan ;

(2) that the Guru is the owner of 17 kanals 15 marlas of land in village Kartarpur and the Gurdwara has in it whatever rights may attach to it by virtue of its being a muafidar ;

(3) that the institution Gangsar has no right, title or interest in 6 kanals 14 marlas of land khassra No. 4008.

(4) that the muafi in dispute belongs to the institution Gangsar subject to the muafi rules of the Govt.; and

(5) that the land in village Dhesian Kahna belongs to the Guru petitioner and the Gurdwara Gangsar has no right, title or interest in it."

No appeal was preferred to this Court against this decree by either party. On January 12, 1938, the Provincial Govt. issued notification No. 12 constituting a statutory committee for Gurdwara Gangsar. On March 27, 1938, within one year from the date of the notification, the committee presented a petition before the tribunal under s. 25-A of the Act praying that a decree be passed in its favour for possession of the properties mentioned therein, which, it was alleged, had been declared by the tribunal in its previous judgments as belonging to the Gurdwara Gangsar. The defendants named in the petition were Guru Amarjit Singh through the Court of Wards and Hira Singh Brahman of Kartarpur. The petition is not a very artistically drawn up document and para. 8, which contains the prayer, is very vaguely worded. It runs as follows :

"It is therefore prayed that a decree for possession of the property mentioned in para. 3, or any right, title or interest therein to which the plaintiff committee may be entitled, be passed in favour of the plaintiff committee against the defendants with costs."

In para. 3 of the plaint it had been stated that on the petition under s. 10 the tribunal had decided on February 28, 1935 :

"(a) That the public have the right to bathe in the waters of the well and to worship it and to worship the Chabutra Kham marked A and the room for Granth Sahib marked B on the notification plan; (b) that the Gurdwara has in it all the rights attached to an area of 17 kanals 15 marlas of land in khewat No. 1, khatauni No. 1219, jamaabandi 1921-22 of Mauza Kartarpur by virtue of its being a muafidar; and (c) that the muafi in dispute entered in the Register No. 203 as given in the notification also belongs to the Gurdwara."

At a subsequent stage of the proceedings before the tribunal, the plaintiff committee withdrew the prayer in respect of item (c) above and the trial proceeded with regard to items (a) and (b) only. The claim was resisted by Guru Amarjit Singh through the Court of Wards substantially on two grounds: (1) that the petition under s. 25-A was not maintainable as no notice had been served on the Court of Wards, at least two months before its institution, as required by s. 19, Punjab Court of Wards Act, II of 1903; and (2) that no decision had been given by the tribunal under s. 10 that the property in dispute belonged to the Gurdwara. It was further averred that the rights which had been given to the Gurdwara in the properties in dispute were not capable of possession.

The tribunal, in an interlocutory order, passed on June 10, 1938, held that s. 19, Punjab Court of Wards Act, did not apply and that no notice under that section to the Court of Wards was necessary. It then proceeded to the trial of the petition on the merits and, eventually, passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff committee for possession of (a) the rights of muafidari in the 17 kanals 15 marlas of land mentioned in the plaint; and (b) of the Gurdwara Gangsar which includes the well with two bathing places and the room and the verandah in which Guru Granth Sahib is opened and which is shown on p. 11 of the notification, Ex. P-1 (with the exception of the rectangle marked as Shivala) subject (1) to the rights of ownership of defendant No. 1 in the site and his rights to irrigate the Moti Bagh and to fill the Indersar tank with waters of the well, (2) to the rights of the public to bathe in the waters of the well and to worship it and to worship at the Chabutra Kham marked A and room for Granth Sahib marked B on the notification plan.

It will be noticed that the decree as passed by the tribunal goes much beyond the prayer in the plaint, which has been reproduced in extenso in an earlier part of the judgment. On appeal before us, the findings of the tribunal on the question of notice as well as on the merits have been challenged and I shall deal with them separately. It has already been pointed out that the petition under s. 25-A is against Guru Amarjit Singh through the Court of Wards. It is common ground that this petition is triable as a suit, and if under the law notice is necessary for institution of a suit for the same relief against the Court of Wards, it would be equally necessary for institution of proceedings under s. 25-A. Section 19,

Court of Wards Act, lays down that:

"No suit relating to the person of any ward or to any property under the superintendence of the Court of Wards shall be instituted in any Civil or Revenue Court until the expiration of two months after notice in writing has been delivered to, or left at, the office of the Deputy Commissioner of the district specified in the order of assumption in the notification under s. 9,....."

As stated above, the dispute relates to (a) the Gurdwara Gangsar including the well with two cisterns or bathing places described as hauz mardana and pona zenana in the notification plan (Ex. P1) and the room in which Guru Granth Sahib is opened together with the verandah in front, and (b) the rights of muafidari in 17 kanals 15 marlas of land. As regards (b) i. e., the claim in respect of the muafidari rights, it is difficult to see how notice under s. 19 is necessary. Admittedly, the muafidari rights in question do not vest in the Guru, nor are they under the superintendence of the Court of Wards. Mr. Achhru Ram, therefore, frankly conceded that the objection of want of notice to the Court of Wards under s. 19 of Act II of 1903 was untenable so far as this part of the claim is concerned. On the merits also, he admitted that in proceedings on the petition under s. 10, the Gurdwara having been declared to be entitled to the rights of muafidari in 17 kanals 15 marlas of land belonging to the Guru, the finding of the tribunal in its judgment under appeal cannot be assailed. The appeal relating to item (b), therefore, fails and must be dismissed.

The position with regard to the claim in respect of item (a), however, is different. In this item are included the well and the two bathing places or cisterns. The tribunal in its judgment and decree passed on February 28, 1935, on the petition under s. 10, had declared that the well and the cisterns belonged to the Guru, that he had the right to irrigate the Moti Bagh and to fill the Indersar tank with waters of the well, and that, at the same time, the public had the right to bathe in the waters of the well and to worship at the Chabutra Kham marked A and room for Granth Sahib marked B on the notification plan. The well and the two cisterns thus being the property of the Guru, subject to certain rights of the public, and the entire property of the Guru being, admittedly, under the superintendence of the Court of Wards, there can be no doubt that notice under s. 19, Court of Wards Act, was necessary before proceedings in a Civil Court could be instituted in respect thereof. In coming to the contrary conclusion the tribunal, in the judgment under appeal, clearly misunderstood its previous decision on the petition under s. 10 and erroneously assumed that the property in the present suit had been declared to belong to the Gurdwara. In its judgment, in the s. 10 petition, dated February 28, 1935, the tribunal, after a lengthy discussion had definitely found that "the rights of ownership in the well and the two cisterns belonged to the Guru subject to the provision that the public had the right to bathe and worship there."

The contention of the Sikh worshippers that the well and the cisterns were endowed property was clearly and unequivocally rejected. In face of this finding and the explicit wording of the decree, dated February 28, 1935, it is difficult to see how it could be said that the well and the cisterns had been declared to be the property of the Gurdwara. The tribunal, in the judgment under appeal, refer to the allegation in the plaint that the well and the cisterns belonged to the Gurdwara. But such an allegation cannot change the real nature of the claim which is for possession of the property which had already been adjudged to belong to the Guru and is at present under the superintendence of the Court of Wards. In support of its conclusion, reliance was placed by the tribunal upon Tara Singh v. Ganda Singh (1), but that case has no bearing whatever on the facts of the present case. There, the Court of Wards, purporting to act under s. 8, Court of Wards Act, had wrongfully assumed supervision of the property of a third party, in which the ward had no share. It was held that its action was ultra vires, and the person affected thereby could sue without giving notice under s. 19 to the Deputy Commissioner. In the case before us, the cisterns and the well are under the superintendence of the Court of Wards, as the property of the ward, and, therefore, s. 19 clearly applies. The claim relating to these properties must, therefore, fail on this ground alone.

The decision of the tribunal is equally untenable on the merits, so far as the well and the cisterns are concerned. The decree passed by the tribunal in the petition under s. 10, the terms of which have been set out in extenso above, does not declare that the Gurdwara has any right, title or interest in the well and the cisterns. They have been declared to belong to the Guru, whose ownership is subject to the right of the "public" to bathe and worship. Obviously, the plaintiff committee does not represent the "public," nor does it claim any right on behalf of the "public." Mr. Harnam Singh frankly admitted that this was so. He urged, however, that the claim of the plaintiff committee was not based on the declaration of rights of the parties as embodied in the decree of February 28, 1935, but it was based on the decree, dated January 19, 1934, passed on the petition under s. 8, which had been affirmed by the High Court on November 28, 1934, where it has been held that the Gurdwara Gangsar was a Sikh Gurdwara and that "it included the well and the two bathing places and the room and the verandah in which Guru Granth Sahib was opened."

A perusal of the plaint, of which the operative part is contained in paras. 3 and 8, does not support this contention. But even if this were so, it does not make any difference. It is no doubt true that the tribunal, in its judgment and decree of January 19, 1934, purported to define the extent of the building of the Gurdwara. But these remarks in the decree were clearly obiter. That decree was passed in proceedings on the petition under s. 8, in which all that the tribunal had to decide was whether the institution, known as Gurdwara Gangsar at Kartarpur, was a Sikh Gurdwara as defined in the Act. It had, at that stage, only to determine the nature and character of the institution and not to adjudicate upon the right, title or interest of the Gurdwara in the properties mentioned in the consolidated list, inclusive of the Gurdwara building. That was a matter which had to be decided in proceedings on the petition under s. 10. The remarks of the tribunal in its judgment and decree of January 19, 1934, defining the extent of the Gurdwara building and stating that it included the well and the two bathing places have, therefore, no legal effect as against the declaration of rights as embodied in the decree of February 28, 1935. In that decree, the Guru was declared to be the owner of the well and the cisterns, subject to the right of the public to bathe and worship. No special rights in these properties were reserved for the Gurdwara and, therefore, the committee cannot claim any right, title or interest in them on behalf of the Gurdwara.

The committee's claim in item (a) included a prayer for possession of the room marked B on the plan in which Guru Granth Sahib is opened and Chabutra Kham in front thereof, marked A. In the memorandum of appeal, the appellant had asked for a reversal of the decree in respect to this room and the Chabutra. Before us, Mr. Achhru Ram, stated, however, that the rooms and Chabutra were originally in possession of Hira Singh and the appellant does not contest this part of the decree. Hira Singh has not appealed and has apparently accepted the decision of the tribunal in this behalf. This part of the decree, therefore, must be maintained. The result is that the appeal is accepted in part and in modification of the decree of the tribunal, the plaintiff committee's claim for possession of the well and the two cisterns (or bathing places described as hauz mardana and pona zenana on the notification plan) is dismissed. In other respects, the decree of the tribunal is affirmed. In the circumstances the parties are left to bear their own costs in both Courts.

Din Mohammad, J.—I agree.

D. Order accordingly.

TAN SOON LI—APPELLANT

BURMA OIL CO. LTD.—RESPONDENT

Abandonment—Fire breaking out at wax refinery—Wax flowing into river and collected by general public and brought and sold in market—Company not asserting right to wax—Company held, must be deemed to have abandoned its right to ownership to wax—Estoppel held arose by inaction—Issuing of press announcement subsequent to completion of salvage held immaterial—Contract—Finder of goods—Suit against purchaser from finder for return of goods—Onus to prove ownership.

A fire broke out at a refinery of a company used in connection with the manufacture of wax and tons of molten wax escaped into the adjoining river and creeks wherefrom it was collected by the general public and was freely bought and sold in the market. The company permitted the salvage, which they themselves were unable or unwilling to undertake, to continue; they took no steps to prevent trading in the wax. No steps were taken by the company to inform the general public of any intention to assert ownership over the wax:

Held, that the company must be deemed to have abandoned its right of ownership over the wax and the issue of a press announcement after the salvage was complete, in assertion of its right by the company was immaterial. [p. 890, col. 2.]

[English case-law relied on.]

Held, further, that the company having stood by at a time when its officials knew perfectly well that members of the general public were trading in the wax and having permitted persons to believe that the company had no further interest in it the estoppel arose by reason of their inaction as there was no prosecution instituted as a warning, no notice in the press, no evidence of cautions given to the general public. [p. 891, col. 1.]

[Case-law referred to.]

In a suit for the return of the goods, against the purchaser from the finder of the goods, it is for the plaintiff to prove that the goods are his and not for the defendant to show that they were his. Perry v. Glissold (5), relied on. [p. 891, col. 2.]

F. A. against a decree of the Assistant District Court, Insein, dated June 5, 1939.

• Dr. Ba Maw, for the Appellant.

Mr. E. C. V. Foucar, for the Respondent.

Roberts, C. J.—On Thursday July 7, 1938, a fire broke out at refinery of the respondent company at Syriam used by them in connexion with the manufacture of wax. Some 2500 tons of molten wax escaped into the Rangoon river and adjoining creeks, some into mid-stream and some on the river banks on which it was stranded with the ebb tide. At the time there was a strike among the labourers of the company. On Friday morning July 8, Mr. Copeman, a Shipping Assistant of the company, received instructions to try and salve the wax, and took three launches, six sampans and a cargo boat in order to do so. He collected wax in mid-stream and he saw a number of persons not in the employment of the company who were also collecting wax. He did not stop them and explained in evidence that he had no authority to do so. The attempt at salvage by the company was only made on this one day. It was difficult to get the requisite labour and the destruction and debris caused by the fire was extensive. Great numbers of villagers went out to gather wax on their own account on July 8, and succeeding days: their operations took place along the bank for several miles, and hundreds of people went out in river craft of all descriptions and waded in mud along the creeks filling with wax any kind of container they could bring for the purpose. A one-ton lorry made a succession of trips between the Syriam jetty and the town laden with wax which was freely bought and sold in the streets. For weeks afterwards, there was a brisk trade in wax: no one was prevented from carrying it on. There was wax in almost every house in Shriam, and it was piled in heaps in the open and was offered for sale there and elsewhere, openly, and was taken away in boats and road vehicles of many kinds.

There is no sort of doubt that everyone who dealt in this wax knew that it was wax which was or had been the property of the company and had escaped into the river as a consequence of the fire and in spite of the efforts of the company to save it. Mr. Mallinson the Officiating Works Manager of the company in his evidence said:

"Some people returned the wax collected by them I did not make any attempt to stop the villagers from collecting the wax. I assumed that they would return the wax to us on receipt of, collection charges. There was no intention on the part of the company to abandon this wax. . . . Some villagers returned the wax saying 'this is your wax'. They did not ask for money. We did not pay anything to them."

He added that other villagers came and said they had wax in their sampans and were offered Rs. 5 per sampan. He does not say it was explained to them that this was offered to them as compensation for their trouble and the expense incurred in preserving the goods for the company as owners. They refused the amounts and took away, the wax.

They were not warned that the wax remained the property of the company. Nothing was done by the company to assert their rights of ownership in any of the wax not in their possession till July 14, when it was discovered that a firm named Messrs. Hee Kee held a quantity of wax and a letter (Ex. E) was written to them to say that "this wax is our property and we have not relinquished our ownership of it. We are prepared to pay reasonable collection and delivery charges on quantities returned to us."

Other letters were written to various firms on later dates to the same effect. But as far as the general public were concerned nothing was done till the publication of a notice, Ex. 50, in various newspapers on August 18. This notice runs as follows:

"Notice is hereby given that the wax which as a result of the fire at Syriam Refinery on July 7, flowed in a molten state into the adjoining Pegu and Rangoon rivers, from where it has since been collected by unauthorized persons, still remains the property of the Burmah Oil Co., Ltd. Persons who do not take immediate steps to return the wax to the Burmah Oil Co., Ltd. are liable to be prosecuted for theft. The Burmah Oil Co., Ltd., requires the return of this wax to its Syriam Refinery or Dunneadaw Installation and upon application is prepared to send a lorry to collect it. Reasonable salvage and collecting charges will be paid on all quantities returned."

Before this notice, said Mr. Mallinson in his evidence,

"the B. O. C. took no action to inform the public about their intention to recover the wax. It was not practicable to go and collect the wax from various villagers. The company waited till the wax got into the hands of the fewer number of people."

Mr. Murray who was in charge of the wax department said in evidence:

"No notice of our intention to recover the wax was given to the public at large before the issue of notice Ex. L. . . . I know that a certain amount of wax was being sold openly. Before the issue of the notice we thought it unnecessary to inform the public that we would give them the salvage charge."

Then he said they thought everyone knew that the wax belonged to the company, and then they learnt that traders were buying it:

"So far as I know the Rangoon office did not take steps at that time to notify the salvors to bring back the wax to us on payment or to stop selling."

In the course of further cross-examination he stated:

"I cannot explain why the Syriam office did not take action to intimate to the people not to buy and sell the wax. As regards the Rangoon office it did nothing beyond writing letters to a few persons after they had bought the wax till August 17, 1938. . . . The chief reason for issuing the notice was that we realized that quite a lot of people were still ignorant of our intention and we wanted to inform them about our intention not to abandon the wax."

One of the persons who bought a quantity of wax was the appellant. He purchased three boat loads on August 4, August 14, and August 20, respectively. No one has contended that at the time of the last purchase he knew of the existence of Ex. L or had any notice other than Ex. L given to him by the company prior to an interview with the company's representative on August 26, and a letter written by them to him on the next day. He refused to return the wax and was prosecuted in a Criminal Court although he answered their letter and set up a claim of right, stating that he had made careful inquiries at Syriam and neighbouring places whether he could buy the wax lawfully and was fully satisfied that the company had abandoned it as derelict. He contended that the conduct of the company in having waited till the bulk of the wax had passed into the hands of several merchants precluded them from asserting their title to it at so late a stage. At this trial Mr. E. W. Davies the manager of the Refinery Department gave evidence for the prosecution. He has since left this country and this evidence was admitted in the present case under s. 33, Evi. Act, and relied on by the company in their reply to the written statement of the appellant. He said:

"The company took no steps whatever to prevent the villagers collecting the damaged wax. The buying and selling of the damaged wax was actually going on to a limited extent and without concealment. I think it was sold in the Syriam jetty bazaar and various villages. No warning was given to the public till we issued the notice in the vernacular papers. We stood by like that on account of the strike, fire and other troubles and because it was not a practical proposition to recover the wax from hundreds of small holders. When we learnt that a large quantity of wax had got into the possession of a few Rangoon merchants we began to take action and we did so because we believed it was their intention to compete against the B. O. C. with the B. O. C.'s own property. . . . By August 19, local candle manufacturers were using this damaged wax for making candles and selling them. This was bound to affect our trade in candles to some extent. It was for this reason we made our press announcement to warn the public in general."

Mr. Lin Bin Hock called for the company said that for four or six days before he received the letter written to him on July 14, he purchased wax openly and nobody objected. He did not see the B O. C. collecting wax. The criminal prosecution of the appellant having proved unsuccessful the company brought an action against the appellant for recovery of the wax or alternatively for its value and the learned Additional District Judge of Insein held they were entitled to recover it and granted a decree accordingly. This appeal has been brought against his judgment and decree.

Dr. Ba Maw for the appellant contended that the company abandoned the wax between July 9 and July 13. Some of it was lost beyond recovery and no steps were taken to inform the general public of any intention to assert ownership over the wax which was being freely brought and sold in the neighbourhood of the refinery. The company could have taken the step which they took on August 17, much earlier if they had desired to do so and could have issued a notice to the public. When wax was brought to them and the finders merely gave it to the company it was accepted but other persons were allowed to remain in possession of wax when they expressed unwillingness to accept Rs. 5 a sampan. They were not told that this amount was offered as collection charges, nor were they warned that the company still claimed to be owners of the wax. They were permitted to sell it as though it was their own property. Though it is true that in individual cases unknown to the appellant the company wrote letters saying that the wax was still theirs it was not until the middle of August that the company ever endeavoured to assert the rights of an owner as against the general public and then only because they thought that traders on a large scale were entering into competition with them. If this had not taken place and the wax had remained in the hands of villagers in small amounts no action would have been taken.

The company permitted the salvage, which they themselves were unable or unwilling to undertake, to continue; they took no steps to prevent trading in the wax. Then when all the work of salvage had been done and as the result of open buying and selling the wax had found its way into the hands of a few merchants they decided it would be profitable to deny their abandonment of the wax. Now on August 10 the company caused a letter to be written to a firm which had openly purchased wax demanding its return "or unless you pay us Rs. 280 per ton you will be liable to immediate prosecution for theft." This was wax which the company knew had been shipped to Hongkong and other places. Mr. Mallinson, and Mr. Pringle of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Co., called by the plaintiffs, valued the damaged wax at Rs. 25 per ton.

It was on August 4, that appellant bought the first boat load of wax. He endeavoured to support his case by alleging in evidence that with two other Chinese, the vendor and broker, he went to the office of Mr. Roper, the General Manager of the company, on or about August 2, and through an interpreter asked Mr. Roper whether the company wanted the wax back and that Mr. Roper said he did not. This story has been disbelieved and the evidence of the alleged interview is not now relied on. But Dr. Ba Maw urges that however untruthful his client may have been this does not and cannot affect the fact that the company had abandoned the wax long before his purchase of it, apart from the operation of any rule of estoppel. The first purchase by the appellant was 28 days after the fire: the wax was in a damaged state. No one had been interfered with or prosecuted for dealing with it. No notice had been issued to the public. There had been in fact an abandonment by the company but the company's officials changed their minds and wished they had not abandoned the wax when they discovered the competition which was bound to affect their trade.

Secondly, it is said there is the question of estoppel. The company intentionally permitted the public of which the appellant was a member to believe that the company had no further interest in the wax and to act upon that belief. Accordingly the company cannot now set up their title to it. In Mercantile Bank of India, Ltd. v. Central Bank of India, Ltd. (1) it was pointed out that estoppel by representation depended upon the existence of a duty and the judgment of Blackburn, J. in Swan v. North British Australasian Co. (2) shows that there must be the neglect of some duty that is owing to the person led into that belief, or to the general public of whom the person is one, and not merely imprudence on the part of the person against whom the estoppel is sought to be founded. Freeman v. Cooke (3) explained that :

"If whatever a man's real intention may be, he so conducts himself that a reasonable man would take the representation to be true and believe that it was meant he should act upon it, and did act upon it as true the party making the representation would be precluded from contesting its truth: and conduct by negligence or omission where there is a duty cast upon a person by usage of trade or otherwise to disclose the truth may often have the same effect. As, for instance, a retiring partner omitting to inform his customers of the fact, in the usual mode, that the continuing partners were no longer authorized to act as his agents, is bound by all contracts made by them with their persons on the faith of their being so authorized."

The illustration shows that "duty" is referred to in a wider sense than a mere duty the breach of which gives rise to a cause of action. In Gregg v. Wells (4) Lord Denman said :

"A party who negligently or culpably stands by and allows another to contract on the faith and understanding of a fact which he can contradict cannot afterwards dispute that fact in an action against the person whom he has himself assisted in deceiving."

It is contended that the general public was induced to believe and did believe as a result of the action of the company in standing by that the wax was to be regarded as a substance in which they had no further interest and which belonged to the salvors. It was not necessary for every member of the public to inquire at the company's office, although the appellant during the course of this action at one time feared it might have been and pretended that he had done so. The company now contends that the position was that they were bound under s. 168, Contract Act, to pay the finders compensation, but their willingness to do so was concealed from the public at the time. During the months of July and early August at least this was not put forward as the position; there is no single instance given in evidence of even the smallest sum paid by them as compensation to finders before their letters beginning on July 14, intimated their willingness to pay such moneys to the particular recipients: the company was not troubling to get the wax back from those members of the general public who they now assert were finders of their property.

Except as affecting the question of costs it does not seem to me to matter that the appellant, after the criminal prosecution chose to try and strengthen his case in the civil action brought against him by giving an account of an alleged interview with Mr.

Roper. What concerns us is the belief which existed in his mind as a member of the public at the time he bought the wax. There is no evidence that he knew of any of the letters such as Ex. E written to individuals in July, and indeed it has never been contended that he had any such knowledge. The appellant's letter to the manager of the company (Ex. N) written on August 31, sets out his position and is precisely the case which is urged before us in appeal. It is conceded that a finder of wax on the day after the fire had a duty to offer to return it to the company but that does not touch the point at issue here which is whether the company's conduct between the date of the fire and August 4, was such as to amount to an abandonment of any wax which had not been offered to them or had been refused by them; and was also such as to raise an estoppel from denying that a purchaser of it in the month of August was the true owner.

It is not necessary for us to decide whether they abandoned the wax which was the subject of the letter written to Messrs. Hoe Kee on July 14, although Dr. Ba Maw has contended that all their wax was abandoned before this date. After such a fire and in all the circumstances of the case it might be difficult to say that the company had stood by and allowed Messrs. Hoe Kee to believe they were acquiring a good title in so short a space of time. But having had it brought to their knowledge in mid July that traders were acquiring wax in this way I am of opinion that they then certainly did abandon the wax which they could not trace. Their notice to the public published in the press on August 18, was a complete change of front induced by their fear of competition after abandonment. So far as estoppel is concerned, it may well be said they stood by as far as the general public was concerned despite the knowledge which their letters to Messrs. Hoe Kee on July 14, and to others show that they then possessed. They did not try to prevent sales but to intervene after sales had taken place. Mr. Murray has said that in some cases in which disputes arose a considerable time after the fire there were settlements out of Court and the company paid Rs. 25 per ton for salvage and delivery charges. The evidence of Mr. Mallinson and Mr. Pringle is that that Rs. 25 to Rs. 30 per ton was its full value to them and there is some ground for the contention that the company were really buying back the wax at that figure.

It was very discoloured and dirty and contained a lot of water.

In my opinion, therefore, the company abandoned the wax in suit. Nothing was done by them until the discovery that it might be profitable to pounce upon the true owner. The criminal prosecution launched against him was preposterous. I also hold that the company is estopped from denying his title. The learned Additional District Judge has considered the matter as though the appellant were a finder of the wax directly after the fire and has referred to s. 403 (2), I.P.C. But the respondent company stood by at a time when its officials knew perfectly well that members of the general public were trading in the wax and permitted persons to believe that the company had no further interest in it. The estoppel arose by reason of their inaction. There was no prosecution instituted as a warning, no notice in the press, no evidence of cautions given to the general public. The judgment and decree of the learned Additional District Judge must be set aside. We are informed that the respondent company is no longer in possession of the wax and there must be an enquiry in the District Court as to the amount to be paid to the appellant for damages in lieu thereof, since we have no evidence which enables us to determine the proper sum to be awarded by reason of the appointment of a Receiver in the suit.

With regard to the question of costs we have been most unfavourably impressed by the palpably false evidence given at the trial by the defendant concerning a fictitious interview with Mr. Roper. This was not even pleaded and the defendant said that he abstained from pleading it for the very purpose of causing surprise. Some of his evidence however, was unchallenged and on his unchallenged evidence together with the evidence of the plaintiffs themselves we think he had a good defence. The order as to costs must be that each side pays its own costs in the Court below and the appellant must have his costs in the appeal, Advocate's fee thirty gold mohurs and also the costs of the enquiry as to damages.

Blagden, J.—The plaint in this case is dated December 16, 1938 and thereby the plaintiff company prayed inter alia for a decree directing the return to them of "all wax in the possession of the defendant" irrespective of its origin. In this demand they have wisely not persisted and the dispute before us had centred round some 136 tons of wax which the defendant had bought from one Tan Cheng Hong during the previous August, which 136 tons of wax I shall hereinafter call "the wax in suit." There is no dispute that the wax in suit had once been the plaintiffs' wax, forming as it did part of a much larger quantity of wax which escaped from their premises in a molten state on July 7, 1938: whether it was still their wax we have to decide. There is no dispute that before commencing their suit the plaintiffs did that which was essential to perfect their cause of action (if any) by demanding the return of the wax in suit and receiving a refusal. The defendant may or may not have been within his rights in refusing to return the wax in suit, but in any event he was not a mere wrongdoer but a purchaser for value; and, of course, it is common ground that immediately before the presentation of the plaint he was in possession of the wax in suit. It is true that at a subsequent stage in the proceedings the plaintiffs applied for and obtained the appointment of a Receiver, as a result of which the defendant lost possession. But this order was made to preserve the subject-matter of the dispute and not to re-judge it: and at the trial the defendant should have been deemed to be still in possession. That being so, it was for the plaintiffs to prove that the wax in suit was theirs and not for the defendant to show that it was his: see the judgment of the Privy Council in Perry v. Cissold (5). This I mention because if there were any serious doubt as to whose the wax in suit was on December 16, 1938 the defendant would have been entitled to the benefit of that doubt, an important point which seems to me to have been somewhat lost sight of in the judgment now under appeal.

Dr. Ba Maw on the appellant's behalf made to us three submissions. First and foremost he contended that on the facts proved or admitted in this case (which I need not recapitulate) the plaintiffs must in law be held to have abandoned the property they formerly had in the wax in suit. He said that abandonment took place on July 8, 1938 (when the plaintiffs ceased their own salvage operations) or at all events a matter of several weeks before, as far as we know, the defendant came on the scene at all. It is quite sufficient for his purpose if the abandonment was complete by August 4, when the defendant made his first purchase, and save for the purpose of testing the validity of his argument it is not necessary to consider the precise moment when, if at all, it took place.

Mr. Foucar submitted (1) that there is in law no such thing as abandonment of property and (2) that in any event the facts here do not point to abandonment. The first proposition is in my opinion far too wide. Authority is not lacking for the legal possibility of abandoning one's property. In Reg. v. Moore (6) Rolfe, B. and in Reg. v. Edwards (7) the C. C. C. R. in England unhesitatingly recognized that such a thing might take place though both were of opinion that on the facts before them it had not done so; see also Rex v. White (8) where the proper direction to a jury on a charge of theft where there is ground for supposing the property in question may have been abandoned is considered. In Archbold's Criminal Law, 28th Edn., p. 545 it is said on the authority of 2 East P. C. 606 and St. Dig. C. L. 2nd Edn., 253 "things of which the ownership has been abandoned are not capable of being stolen," while in Madras it seems to have been held on facts identical with those in Reg. v. Edwards (7) that abandonment was in fact complete: see 4 M. H. C. App. 30, cited in Ratanlal and Thakore's Law of Crimes, Edn. 13, p. 928. I may add that in Mitchil v. Alestree (9) Twisden, J. asserts that a man loses such property as he has in a tame fox if it escapes and resumes its wild nature: To hold that he is in a better position if, for example, he deliberately turns the animal loose hoping never to see it again, and then changes his mind when one of his neighbours has shot it, would, I think, be repugnant to common sense.

The question whether in this case we can say, the question of abandonment or no abandonment being one of fact, that abandonment did take place before the defendant bought the wax in suit is much more difficult. We must and do make every allowance for the difficulties in which at the material time the plaintiffs were placed by the strike (though this seems to have been nearing its end), by the fire, and by the immense quantity of the wax which had escaped. We must bear in mind that the original escape of the wax took place in spite and not because of the actions of the plaintiffs for, it is much easier to infer that a man has abandoned that which he has deliberately thrown away than that of which he has lost possession by the act of God or of a third party. But as against this it must be remembered that the wax escaped into a river which like all rivers "wound somewhere safe to sea." If nothing was done by anybody about retrieving it most of it must within quite a short time have been irretrievably lost and, after the first day, the plaintiffs for their part did nothing about retrieving it. For myself I attach particular importance to the fact that the plaintiffs ceased their salvage operations after one day and very little to their motive in so doing which, after all, the general public cannot have known though it might or might not have guessed. Mr. Foucar rightly stressed to us the practical difficulties of doing at that stage more than they did, but most properly admitted that they could at least then have advertised, as they did five weeks later. Whether they owed anyone but themselves a duty to do so, I will not, for the moment, discuss: but I do not think that in all the circumstances it was the least that a person in their position who did not intend to abandon the wax would have done. In my judgment we are justified in saying and bound to say that on the evidence before him and in particular that of the plaintiffs' own witnesses the only conclusion at which the learned Judge could properly have arrived was that at some time between July 8 and 14, 1938, the plaintiffs had abandoned their property in the wax then unsalved; so that it became first the property of nobody, and then the property of the first person to reduce it into possession. As I have said it is for the plaintiffs to show title and therefore in the absence of evidence that the wax in suit had before the plaintiffs abandoned it been salved by some third party (i. e. was stolen wax) we must conclude that the wax in suit formed part of the abandoned wax, as it is overwhelmingly probable that it did. Putting it at the very lowest (and this is quite sufficient for Dr. Ba Maw's case) we should in my judgment hold that had he properly directed himself the learned Judge must have been left in reasonable doubt as to the plaintiffs' title and should therefore have dismissed the suit.

It may well be that at a quite early stage the plaintiffs began to repent them of their decision and sought, ultimately by taking drastic steps, to undo what they had done. But this seems to me to make no difference since from its very nature abandonment must be irrevocable. Dr. Ba Maw's second submission only becomes material if we are wrong in our views on his first. He contends that failing abandonment in fact the plaintiffs are estopped from denying abandonment. Mr. Foucar on the other hand says that they never represented to any one that they had abandoned any wax; or if they did that they owed no duty to the defendant and, in the absence of such a duty, cannot be estopped. In support of the latter proposition he relies on Mercantile Bank of India, Ltd. v. Central Bank of India, Ltd. (1).

He further contends that to rely on estoppel the person who seeks to do so must have been not only misled but misled despite his being a reasonable man, and as authority for this he cites Parke, B. in Freeman v. Cooke (3). The defendant, he says, was not misled at all, or, if misled was unreasonable in reaching the conclusion he did. In my judgment there was, at least, a representation of abandonment. My reasons are the same as my own and my Lord's reasons for thinking there was in fact an abandonment, and I will not repeat them. The doctrine that there can be no estoppel where there is no duty owing by the party said to be estopped to the party misled, or to the general public of whom that person is one, probably originated in the judgment of Blackburn, J., in Swan v. North British Australasian Co. (2) (qualifying the observations of Ashhurst, J., in Lickbarrow v. Mason (10) and received the approbation of the House of Lords in Jones & Co. v. Waring and Gillow Ltd. (11) and of the Privy Council in Mercantile Bank of India, Ltd. v. Central Bank of India, Ltd. (1). Moreover Blackburn, J., at p. 181* described the duty referred to as a "duty which the law casts" upon the party said to be estopped, which indicates that mere moral duty will not suffice.

What however, is meant by "duty" in this connection? It may mean only an obligation the mere breach of which will of itself involve the defaulting party in a legal liability or it may also include an obligation which a party need only fulfil if he proposes to assert a particular right or to rely on a particular defence in subsequent proceedings. The illustration, given by Blackburn, J., himself in his subsequent citation from the judgment of Parke, B. in Freeman v. Cooke (3) of the outgoing partner who fails to notify the fact of his retirement shows clearly that he used the word "duty" in the wider sense. Such a person may indeed be made liable for the debts of the continuing partners: but, if the latter duly meet their obligation no one in the world has any right to complain that he kept his retirement a secret. Moreover, in the course of the argument in Freeman v. Cooke (3), Parke B. says that in the majority of cases in which an estoppel exists

"the party must have induced the other so to alter his position that the former would be responsible to him in an action for it;" there can be no majority without a minority. It also seems clear that to found an estoppel there need be no duty, even in the wide sense I have tried to indicate, to make a representation. It is quite sufficient if there is a duty to speak the truth if speaking at all. A person who is minded to allow the public a short cut across his field is not bound to indicate by a sign-post the path which he is dedicating. But if he does put a sign-post he cannot, while it is up, maintain trespass against users of the path, and the reason is that the law casts on him a duty, in the sense indicated above, not to blow hot and cold. Here we have to deal with the much more difficult case of a passive and not an active misrepresentation. Mr. Foucar says that at the worst his clients were foolish and that a man or company is not bound to abstain from folly. As a general proposition that is true enough. But if a man's folly becomes the proximate cause of damage to his neighbours that is a very different story, and one daily illustrated in the use (or misuse) of internal combustion engines. Here again, the fact that it was into a river that the wax escaped is of great importance. In this respect the present case resembles those English cases in which a man whose goods have been wrongfully seized in execution stands by knowing that a sale under the execution is intended rather than those in which he stands by knowing only of the seizure. He has been held to be estopped in the former but not in the latter circumstances: see McCardie, J.'s judgment in Jones Brothers Holloway Ltd. v. Woodhouse (12) at pp. 127 and 128.

It was here no fault of the plaintiffs that the wax escaped; but they must and according to Mr. Murray's own evidence, they did know before they advertised that the situation of the escaped wax was after July 8, 1938 such that reasonable doubt did in fact exist among the public as to whose it was and that other people were taking trouble and incurring expense in dealing with the wax and would thereby suffer damage if the plaintiffs later successfully claimed it. Many cases might be thought of in which the duty to warn a person that he is heading for danger is, at most, a moral duty. I do not think the present is one of them. In my judgment the omission to take reasonable steps to assert their title to the escaped wax when ceasing their pursuit thereof, which again, in my opinion, gave the public reasonable grounds for thinking they no longer claimed a title to it, was just such an omission as s. 115, Evi. Act, contemplates. This section has been said more than once to be a codification of the English Law of estoppel and, in England, Courts of Equity have long recognized the principle that a man cannot with impunity stand by having a charge or encumbrance on property and allow others to make advances on it on the faith of its being unencumbered. See for example Troughton v. Gitley (13), and the very pertinent observations of Lord Granworth in Ramsden v. Dyson (14) at p. 140 and of Thesiger, L. J. in De Bussche v. Alt (15) at p. 314 both cited in the judgment of McCardie, J., to which I have just referred. The former says:

"If a stranger begins to build on my land supposing it to be his own, and I perceiving his mistake, abstain from setting him right, and leave him to persevere in his error, a Court of Equity will not allow me afterwards to assert my title to the land on which he had expended money on the supposition that the land was his own."

The latter says this:

"If a person having a right, and seeing another person about to commit, or in the course of committing an act infringing upon that right, stands by in such a manner as really to induce the person committing the act, and who might have abstained from it, to believe that he assents to its being committed, he cannot afterwards be heard to complain of the act."

Nor was this principle unknown in the English Common Law Courts. In Cornish v. Abington (16) Pollock, C. B. says:

"If any person, by a course of conduct or by actual expressions, so conducts himself that another may reasonably infer the existence of an agreement or licence, whether the party intends that he should do so or not, it has the effect that the party using that language or who has so conducted himself, can not afterwards gainsay the reasonable inference to be drawn from his words or conduct."

As to the question whether reasonableness is essential in the person relying on estoppel, in my opinion, that was here in fact nothing unreasonable in the belief, if it existed, that the wax in question had been abandoned. Mr. Foucar said it was unreasonable to suppose the Burmah Oil Company would give anything away. There is certainly this much to be said for his argument, viz., that when some villagers brought wax back to them and did not expressly ask for remuneration, they did not give them one anna for their trouble; while conversely, from others they demanded under a threat of prosecution Rs. 280 for what they now say was worth Rs. 25. Neither of these facts indicates magnanimity: but in fact in my judgment the wax had been abandoned and it cannot be unreasonable to believe what is true. We, at all events, having held the fact believed to be true, can hardly held the belief in it to be unreasonable. Even if I am wrong in this, I do not consider that Mr. Foucar's contention as to reasonableness is right, when one is enquiring whether a party believed a representation or not it is undoubtedly most material to enquire whether it would have been reasonable for him to do so, the more extravagant the story the less likely he is to have believed it. Given, however, that he in fact believed, the requisite that the belief should be reasonable is conspicuously absent from the Evi. Act, s. 115. A passage in Baron Parke's considered judgment in Freeman v. Cooke (3) (which I have already referred) is relied on. Parke, B. first says that it is essential to an estoppel at least that he (the party estopped) "means his representation to be acted upon, and that it is acted upon accordingly." He then, by way of qualification of what he has just said, uses the words on which Mr. Foucar specially relies

"and if, whatever a man's real intention may be, he so conducts himself that a reasonable man would take the representation to be true and believe that it was meant that he should act upon it, and did act upon it as true, the party making the representation would be equally precluded from contesting its truth."

He then proceeds (making no further reference to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the party misled)

"and conduct, by negligence or omission where there is a duty cast upon a person by usage of trade or otherwise to disclose the truth may often have the same effect."

Compare the similar words of Abinger, C. B. in Cornish v. Abington (16) already quoted. Neither of these passages in so far as they mention the reasonableness of the belief induced, is read in its context, a definition, but each is rather an illustration of circumstances in which an estoppel commonly arises. But if either was meant to be a definition, it is not the same definition as that in the Evi. Act, and we are administering the Law of Burma and not that of England. Mr. Foucar rightly points out that the Privy Council has said that the section is an enactment of the English Law. Whether that means that we must read into the section words that are not there in order to make it precisely tally with the language of individual English jurists however eminent, used long before the passing of the Act, I should be inclined to doubt. But as we hold that the belief, if in fact it existed, was here a reasonable belief we need not decide the point.

As to the existence of the belief in question, the case has been somewhat complicated by the defendant's conduct in seeking at what was obviously a very late stage to fortify an already excellent case which has stood him in good stead in the quite unjustifiable criminal proceedings that had been taken against him, by adding to it at the trial of this action, a story which is now admitted to be completely false. On this point, however, there is nothing that I can usefully add to my Lord's judgment. The worst of liars may, at times tell the truth and as my Lord has shown the essential part of the defendant's case was not really challenged. I respectfully agree that complete justice can be done to the plaintiffs if we make the order as to costs which my Lord has proposed. The only other point in the case (which now does not arise) concerns ss. 168 and 169, Contract Act. As to this, I do not as at present advised see any reason why a finder of goods should not transfer to another such rights in those goods as he has. Mr. Foucar could advance no reason why the owner should be freed from any liability to pay compensation by such accidents as the death or bankruptcy of the finder and I see nothing contrary to public policy in a voluntary transfer of those rights, although clearly there can be no transfer of the property in the goods where s. 169 is not satisfied. In view, however, of our conclusions on the other points in the case we need not decide this one. Finally, I should like to thank both the learned Advocates for the assistance they have given to us, and in particular to myself as a newcomer to this Court.

APPELLANTS—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS

BHAGIRATTHISAO GAJRAJ AND

C. P. Debt Conciliation Act (II of 1933), s. 15 (1) —Member of joint family incurring debt in individual capacity—Creditor attaching his share in house belonging to family—Debtor dying—Brothers of deceased obtaining certificate under s. 15 (1) in respect of debt of deceased brother—Creditor, if can proceed with execution in respect of share attached by him.

A member of a joint family had incurred a debt in his individual capacity on a bond. He was sued on this bond and a decree was passed against him. In execution of this decree the creditor attached a house. His brothers, three in number, raised an objection to the attachment and succeeded in getting their three-quarters interest in the house released, but the attachment in respect of the debtors' brother remaining quarter share subsisted. After the death of the debtor his brothers made an application to the Debt Conciliation Board in respect of their own family debts some of which were conciliated and an agreement under s. 12 (2) of the Debt Conciliation Act followed. and a certificate under s. 15 (1) of the Act was issued in respect of them. Among these debts was the debt due by their deceased brother and this debt fell within the ambit of the certificate under s. 15 (1). When the creditor attempted to carry on with his execution proceedings in respect of the quarter share of the house which he had attached, the executing Court held that the execution could not proceed in view of the certificate granted by the Debt Conciliation Board; but the Court directed that the attachment should continue. In appeal the order was set aside the Court holding that the debt was not a debt of the three brothers, at all, and he ordered the execution case to proceed according to law:

Held, that despite the wide definition of "debt" in s. 2 of the Debt Conciliation Act, this debt was not a debt of the three brothers at all, there was no liability on their part to pay the debt at all, since they had not inherited any property from their deceased brother. The interest which their deceased brother had in the family property disappeared on his death except in so far as that interest had been attached. The brothers, then, had placed before the Debt Conciliation Board a fictitious debt in order to avoid the embarrassment which would arise by the sale of the deceased brother's interest in the attached house, and the issue of a certificate in respect of a debt which was not the debt of the persons making the application to the Debt Conciliation Board was one beyond the Board's jurisdiction and was ineffective in so far as that particular debt was concerned.

Misc. A. from an order of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Bilaspur, dated April 30, 1938.

Mr. G. R. Deo, for the Appellants.

Mr. R. B. Choudhury, for the Respondents.

Order.—One Rambhau, who was a member of joint family, had incurred a debt in his individual capacity on a bond. He was sued on this bond and a decree was passed against him. In execution of this decree the creditor attached a house under the belief that it was the sole property of Rambhau. His brothers, three in number, raised an objection to the attachment and succeeded in getting their three-quarters interest in the house released, but the attachment in respect of Rambhau's remaining quarter share subsisted. Rambhau then died. His brothers then proceeded to make an application to the Debt Conciliation Board in respect of their own family debts some of which were conciliated and an agreement under s. 12 (2) of the Debt Conciliation Act followed, and others were not conciliated and a certificate under s. 15 (1) of the Debt Conciliation Act was issued in respect of them. Among the debts put forward by these brothers was the debt due by their brother Rambhau, and this debt fell within the ambit of the certificate under s. 15 (1). When the creditor attempted to carry on with his execution proceedings in respect of the quarter share of the house which he had attached, the executing Court held that the execution could not proceed in view of the certificate granted by the Debt Conciliation Board; but in view of the argument that, if the attachment was raised the creditor's remedy would disappear entirely as Rambhau's share would pass to his brothers by survivorship, the Court directed that the attachment should continue. In appeal the Additional District Judge, Bilaspur, set aside the order in the executing Court, holding that the debt was not a debt of the respondents, that is to say, the three brothers, at all, and he ordered the execution case to proceed according to law. The three brothers have now preferred this miscellaneous appeal.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that, rightly or wrongly, a certificate has been issued by the Debt Conciliation Board which has held the debt to be a debt of the three brothers, and that execution cannot proceed although the learned Counsel states that he does not ask that the attachment on the property should be released. I am of opinion that despite the wide definition of "debt" in s. 2 of the Debt Conciliation Act, this debt is not a debt of the appellants at all, and their learned Counsel is wrong when he states that they are liable to pay to the extent of the property of their deceased brother in their hands. They have not inherited any property from their deceased brother Rambhau; they have obtained it by survivorship, and as admittedly Rambhau had no separate property of his own, there is nothing of his which could be called assets which could pass into the appellants' hands. When a creditor is dealing with an unsecured debt due from a member of a joint family in his individual capacity and the debtor dies, the creditor has no remedy unless he happens to have attached the debtor's interest in the family property during his lifetime. Here what had been attached is not Rambhau's interest in the whole of the family property, but only his interest in one particular item, namely, a house. That is all to which the creditor can look for the purpose of satisfying his claim. There is no liability on the part of the appellants to pay the debt at all, since they have not inherited any property from Rambhau. The interest which their deceased brother had in the family property disappears on his death except in so far as that interest has been attached. The brothers, then, have placed before the Debt Conciliation Board a fictitious debt in order to avoid the embarrassment which will arise by the sale of the deceased brother's interest in the attached house, and the issue of a certificate in respect of a debt which is not the debt of the persons making the application to the Debt Conciliation Board is one beyond the Board's jurisdiction and is ineffective in so far as that particular debt is concerned. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 15.

Appeal dismissed.

VOLUME 194-1941

REPORTS SECTION

Abandonment.—Fire breaking out at wax refinery—Wax flowing into river and collected by general public and brought and sold in market—Company not asserting right to wax—Company held, must be deemed to have abandoned its right to ownership to wax—Estoppel held arose by inaction—Issuing of press announcement subsequent to completion of salvage held immaterial.

A fire broke out at a refinery of a company used in connection with the manufacture of wax and tons of molten wax escaped into the adjoining river and creeks wherefrom it was collected by the general public and was freely bought and sold in the market. The company permitted the salvage, which they themselves were unable or unwilling to undertake, to continue; they took no steps to prevent trading in the wax. No steps were taken by the company to inform the general public of any intention to assert ownership over the wax.

Held, that the company must be deemed to have abandoned its right of ownership over the wax and the issue of a press announcement after the salvage was complete, in assertion of its right by the company was immaterial.

Held, further, that the company having stood by at a time when its officials knew perfectly well that members of the general public were trading in the wax and having permitted person to believe that the company had no further interest in it the estoppel arose by reason of their inaction as there was no prosecution instituted as a warning, no notice in the press, no evidence of cautions given to the general public. *TAN SOON LI v. Administration—Application in administration suit to spend money on marriage expenses of minor plaintiff—Marriage against the provisions of Child Marriage Restraint Act (XIX of 1929)—Parties to marriage domiciled in Bikanir—Marriage to be performed in Bikanir—Source of income in British India—Application held could not be granted.

In an administration suit an application was made for liberty to spend out of the estate certain sum to meet the marriage expenses of the plaintiff who was a minor and had not reached the age of 16. Both the bridegroom and the bride were domiciled in Bikanir where the marriage ceremony was to be performed. The source of income was, however, in Calcutta:

Held, that the Court should not facilitate conduct which the Legislature in British India had made penal under the provisions of the Child Marriage Act, even if such marriage was not punishable according to law of Bikanir. HANSRAJ BHUTERIA v. ASKARAN BHUTERIA Cal. 730

Adverse Possession—Acts of temporary and flimsy character cannot destroy real owner's title.

Where a house has fallen in ruins for a long time and the land has presented the appearance of a mere ahata with a dalan bounded on all sides by the houses of neighbours, such acts of possession as tethering of cattle, using the land as a play ground, cooking food on the occasions of ceremonies and even planting trees by the persons who are no other than the members of the real owner's family, cannot possibly arouse the notice of the real owners even if the real owner has been living in the same town; much less would they constitute adverse possession against him if he has been living away from the land since very long time, since occasional acts are acts of a temporary and flimsy character which do not destroy the title of the real owner. IQBAL ALI v. S. HUMAYUN QADIR Oudh 50
Burden of proof—Permissive possession not set up—Question, how to be approached.

It is the duty of the plaintiffs claiming title by adverse possession to establish affirmatively that they had acquired statutory title to the property by reason of adverse possession for the requisite period. Where no case of permissive possession has been set up by defendant in the pleadings, and the permissive character of possession has never arisen as an independent issue calling for a decision in the case, it is wholly wrong to approach the question of adverse possession by determining whether the defendant has proved a case of permissive possession or not and hold adverse possession upon the weakness of that case. IQBAL ALI v. S. HUMAYUN QADIR Oudh 50

Adverse possession—concl'd.Essentials of adverse possession—Onus of establishing essentials.

The title of the owner must be deemed to carry with it the legal possession and must be deemed to subsist, unless and until there is an open and hostile assertion of title accompanied by exclusive possession of an effective nature to the knowledge of the actual owner. To constitute a plaintiff's title by adverse possession, the possession required to be proved must be adequate in continuity, in publicity, and in extent, and is displaced by evidence of partial possession by the defendant, and the onus of establishing these essential elements is upon the adverse possessor. IQBAL ALI v. S. HUMAYUN QADIR Oudh 50

Hostile and notorious possession—Situation, user and nature of property to be considered.

In determining the question whether possession is hostile and notorious so as to charge the real owner with notice of the adverse claim the nature, the situation and the user of the property must be considered. IQBAL ALI v. S. HUMAYUN QADIR Oudh 50

Question as to, is mixed one of law and fact—Whether proved facts substantiate plea of adverse possession is matter of law—If can be challenged in second appeal.

The question of adverse possession is a mixed question of fact and law. Though the facts found by the Court of first appeal must be accepted as final in second appeal, the question whether the proved facts substantiate the plea of adverse possession is a matter of law which can be challenged in second appeal. IQBAL ALI v. S. HUMAYUN QADIR Oudh 50

Title by adverse possession, if can originate during minority of person sought to be defeated by adverse possession.

Title by adverse possession cannot originate during the minority of the person sought to be defeated by adverse possession. To acquire adverse possession there must be acts of exclusion or ouster amounting to open assertion of hostile title, knowledge of which must be attributable to the person sought to be excluded so as to enable him to resist the acts. A minor is not in a position to know of or to resist acts of ouster and there can be no overt acts amounting to open assertion of a hostile title against a minor. KHEM-CHAND DAYARAM v. s. 253—S. 253, scope of—Order of ejectment passed before expiry of 15 days' notice—Appeal and then revision from order—Judgment-debtor not making attempt to pay amount in meanwhile—If can take advantage of technical irregularity.

Once the High Court is seized of the revision, then, it becomes its duty to cast its eye not merely on one part of the proceedings but the whole of them. What comes under the review of the High Court are the proceedings as a whole from start to finish and the object of the scrutiny of the High Court is that so far as possible justice may be done in the proceedings as a whole.

A landlord obtained a decree for arrears of rent against the tenant. The notice under s. 80 (2) was served on the judgment-debtor on July 23, 1937. On August 7, 1937, the Assistant Collector treating the matter as if there had been a default in complying with the notice, made an ejectment order although 15 days required by notice had not expired at the time of such order. There was an appeal and also a revision to the High Court and the tenant although he had ample time to pay the amount made no attempt to pay it.

Held, that though the order of the Assistant Collector was technically irregular there was no injustice to the judgment-debtor and he could not be allowed to take advantage of the technical irregularity upon an application for revision. RATI RAM v. NIADER MAL All. 640

Amendment. See Pleadings 72, 117, 769
Appeal. See Practice 37, 256, 380*Letters Patent—Case certified to be fit for appeal to Letters Patent, includes order for costs made or refused in that case.*

When a "case" is certified to be fit for appeal to the Letters Patent the word 'case' includes an order for costs made or refused in that case, which is obviously ancillary to the substantive order made in the case. SAIN DASS v. LAKHAJEE Rang. 306

Parties—Held on facts that appeal was incompetent in the absence of a party which was a necessary party.

A person as an agent of another executed a promissory note in favour of C. C. instituted a suit on the note claiming relief alternatively against the agent and the principal. The suit was decreed against the principal and dismissed against the agent. No appeal was filed against the dismissal and consequently it became barred. The principal, however, appealed against the decree against him and contended that the agent and not he, was liable on the promissory note. The agent, however, was not impleaded as necessary party to the appeal:

Held, (1) that when the right of appeal against the dismissal of the suit against the agent was barred, the agent was no longer an interested party. He was entitled to hold the decree in his favour: it was a substantive right of a very valuable kind of which he could not be lightly deprived;

(2) that the appeal by the principal was incompetent unless the agent was added by him as necessary party;

(3) that it was not necessary for C to have appealed against the agent's dismissal from the suit. It was incumbent on the principal, if he desired to appeal against the judgment in favour of the agent, to do so;

(4) that the order of the Court would be that the decree of the trial Court against the principal would be restored. SAIN DASS v. LAKHAJEE Rang. 306

Arbitration—Award—Suit to set aside—Award under Burma Co-operative Societies Act, ignoring law of limitation—Suit to set aside such award, if maintainable.

Courts are always inclined where possible to support the validity of an award and will not lend themselves to a consideration of what a Court of Law would have done, when the parties have agreed on the one hand or when there is a statutory obligation placed upon them on the one hand, to refer their disputes to a tribunal which is not a Court of Law. But, on the other hand, that tribunal must come to a decision which is a quasi judicial decision or must make an award which has been arrived at after proper consideration of the case. An arbitrator is bound to give effect to all legal defences including a defence under any statute of limitation.

Consequently where an award made by an arbitrator appointed under the Burma Co-operative Societies Act, has ignored the law of limitation, a suit to set aside the award is maintainable. CO-OPERATIVE TOWN BANK, v. U KYAW THA Rang. 220

Assam Debt Conciliation Act (X of 1936), ss. 7, 8 (3)—Debt Settlement Board, whether has inherent final jurisdiction to determine existence and amount of debt.

A Board in Assam has no inherent final jurisdiction to determine questions relating to the existence and amount of a debt though the Board might have to consider such question incidentally, for example, under s. 4 of the Act, in order to enable it to decide whether or not it had jurisdiction to deal with a particular application. *PULIN BEHARI DAS v. Where the Board holds that a particular debt was not subsisting as it was time-barred, the order amounts to an order that it has no jurisdiction to deal with the particular debt as it was time-barred, and therefore, finality only attaches to the order in so far as it purports to decide that the Board had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter, but, in so far as the order may have purported to decide whether the alleged debt was in existence or its amount, no finality would attach thereto and therefore it would not oust under s. 8(3) or s. 16(4) the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to deal with the debtor. *PULIN BEHARI DAS v. s. 21—Application under s. 4—Board holding particular debt to be time-barred—Civil Court, if should suspend proceedings in respect of such debt though application may be pending before Board.

Where an application under s. 4 is made to the Board for the settlement of debts, and the Board holds that a particular debt mentioned in the application is time-barred the Civil Court is under no obligation to suspend the execution proceedings before it in connection with that decree even though the application under s. 4 may be pending before the Board. *PULIN BEHARI DAS v. The mere fact that a person had no prior banking transaction with the Bank will not by itself be sufficient to exclude the possibility of the person's having become a customer of the Bank when he paid in the amounts. Again the mere fact that a customer gives directions to a banker to apply in a particular manner moneys standing to his credit will not necessarily make the relationship between the parties fiduciary.

Where the account books of the parties to show that the amounts were credited in anamath or suspense account to await the instructions of the creditor as regards their disposal and the usual procedure of giving pass books and cheque books was not followed and no agreement was entered into regarding the interest payable on the deposits, the amounts must be deemed to have been received by the Bank in a fiduciary capacity and not as between a Bank and its customer. Consequently such a creditor is entitled to preferential claim over other customers of the Bank. OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE v. NATESAM PILLAI Mad. 728

Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (VII of 1936), ss. 2, (8) (iii), 34—Decree passed for cash equivalent of bhag produce in suit for non-payment of share bhag produce by defendant, whether "debt" within meaning of Act—Execution proceedings in respect of such decree, if can be stayed under s. 34.

Where a decree is passed in a suit instituted by the decree-holder against the judgment-debtors for non-payment of their share of the bhag produce due in respect of a certain plot for a cash equivalent of the produce, such a decree is not a debt within the meaning of the Ben. Agri. Debtors Act and is, therefore, exempted from its operation. The execution proceedings in respect of such decree cannot, therefore, be stayed under s. 34. *HEMENDRA NATH ROY CHOWDHURY v. (b)—Offence under s. 54 (b)—Cognizance taken on challan submitted by Inspector of Police—Proceedings held did not comply with s. 83 (b) and were, therefore, void.

Police reported an offence under s. 51 (b), Ben. The Magistrate took cognizance on a challan submitted by the Inspector of Police :

Held, that it could not be said that the Police Officer who filed the challan of which cognizance was taken answered to the description required by s. 83, namely "an excise officer authorized by the Collector in this behalf." In the circumstances the whole proceedings were void. FAKIR MAHAMMAD v. EMPEROR Cal. 777

The accused took delivery of some tins of mustard oil at the Railway Station for the purpose of selling them. On the same day while the goods were actually on the railway premises a sample was taken from these tins by the Sanitary Inspector and it was found that the mustard oil contained therein was adulterated:

Held, that although the goods had actually left the railway premises, they were nevertheless being stored for sale by the accused within the meaning of s. 6 (1) of the Bengal Food Adulteration Act. The requisite initial onus had been discharged by the prosecution. The accused came into physical possession of the consignment as soon as he took delivery thereof at the Railway Station and from the moment that he took such delivery until the goods were actually exposed for sale in his shop there could be no doubt that he was actually storing them with a view to their ultimate disposal by sale. The fact that he could have had no opportunity to examine the nature of the goods between the time when he took delivery of them and the time when a sample was taken was no defence in view of s. 6 (3). *HARI RAKSHAK DUTT v. Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 26-G—Held on construction that mortgage was not usufructuary but one by conditional sale.

Held, on construction of the mortgage-deed, that the mortgage was not a usufructuary mortgage as contemplated by s. 58 (d), T. P. Act. Although the mortgagees were given possession of the mortgaged properties and they were entitled to appropriate the rents and profits towards the interest due, yet the essential element of a usufructuary mortgage was wanting, namely that the mortgagee would retain possession of the properties till the mortgage money was paid. The transaction was substantially a mortgage by conditional sale though certain rights of a usufructuary mortgage were also given to the mortgagees. The expressions kot kobala and saf kobala which were used in the document were quite sufficient to show that the mortgage was by conditional sale. MAHENDRA NATH SARDAR v. s. 2 (a)—Definition of "agricultural income" in Bihar Act and Income Tax Act compared.

The word "revenue" in s. 2 (1), Income Tax Act is used to denote income or a revenue receipt as opposed to a capital receipt and, therefore, covers all income from agricultural land other than rent. No real distinction can be drawn between the expressions "rent or revenue" in Income Tax Act and "rent or income" in Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act and it cannot be said that by the use of the words "rent or income" the Provincial Govt. are taxing something more than is permissible by the definition in the Income Tax Act. JHALAK PRASAD SINGH v. PROVINCE OF BIHAR Pat. 663 S B

s. 2 (a)—Held, that incomes derived by assessee in this case from such sources were not derived from land used for agricultural purposes or from agricultural land and could not be assessed to tax under Act—Words and phrases—'Bankar', 'lahkar' and 'phalkar' meaning explained.

Where the 'bankar' income was derived by the assessee from virgin jungles or jungle land not actually cultivated and the trees appeared to have grown naturally in the jungles without the intervention of human agency:

Held, that the growth of these trees could not be said to result from the cultivation of the soil and the income referred to as "bankar" was not derived from agricultural land or from agriculture and, therefore, it could not be assessed under the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act.

Lac is not the result of any cultivation but is the creation of a particular insect when placed on particular trees. Where nothing appears to be done by the assessee beyond placing the insect on the trees, it cannot be held that 'lahkar' income is derived from land used for agricultural purposes or from agriculture.

"Phalkar" is income derived from wild jungle fruits, and it cannot be said that the fruit gathered is the result of any cultivation, but, on the contrary, it is the result of the absence of cultivation. Trees and bushes yielding these fruits grow on cultivated soil but on land not under cultivation and frequently the more neglected and wild the land is the thicker grow these wild bushes and trees yielding such crop. Practically in all cases the crop is the result of want of cultivation and not the result of cultivation.

Held, that it was not established that the income described as "phalkar" in the case was income derived from land used for agriculture or from agriculture and, therefore, not assessable to agricultural income-tax. THE PROVINCE OF BIHAR v. PRATAP UDAI NATH SAHIDEO OF RATUGARH Pat. 238 S B

s. 2 (a)—Income of raiyats and tenure-holders of revenue free land, if covered by definition of "agricultural income."

It is open to the High Court so to limit the definition given in the Bihar Act as to bring it within the competence of the local Legislature.

The income of a raiyyat does not fall within s. 2 (a) (1) of the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act but rather falls within s. 2 (a) (2) (1) of that Act. His income is derived from land by agriculture and clearly falls within the definitions given in both the Bihar Act and the Income Tax Act.

The income of tenure-holders of revenue free land falls within the definition given in both the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act and the Income Tax Act and, therefore, the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act cannot be held to be ultra vires upon this ground. JHALAK PRASAD SINGH v. PROVINCE OF BIHAR Pat. 663 S B

s. 2 (a)—Income Tax Act, s. 2 (1)—Word 'local rate' in s. 2 (1), Income Tax Act, if covers cess.

The expression "local rate" used in Income Tax Act in the definition of "agricultural income" is wide enough to cover cess which is a term used in Bihar for local rates levied on immovable property for the benefit of local authorities. Hence the addition of the words "local cess" in the definition of "agricultural income" given in the Bihar Act does not affect the matter in any way and does not in any way extend the field of taxation. JHALAK PRASAD SINGH v. PROVINCE OF BIHAR Pat. 663 S B

s. 2 (a)—Regulation I of 1793, construction—Effect of—Tax under Bihar Act, if infringement of rights granted to zemindars by Permanent Settlement Regulation.

Regulation I of 1793 contains no assurance or undertaking to the zemindar that he would for ever thereafter be immune from taxation such as that imposed by the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act. The Regulation merely contains an assurance that the jama or land revenue payable by the zemindar would never be increased.

• The tax imposed on agricultural income by the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, 1938, is in no way an infringement of the rights granted to zemindar by the Permanent Settlement Regulations.

The tax imposed by the Bihar Act is a tax on income though limited to income derived from agricultural sources it is in no sense a tax on the land or payment in the nature of jama because it is imposed on the income derived from the land and not on the land itself. It cannot therefore be said that the Bihar Agri. Income Tax does in any way purport to affect, vary or repeal any provision in the Permanent Settlement Regulations particularly Ben. Regulation, I of 1793 JHALAK PRASAD SINGH v. PROVINCE OF BIHAR Pat. 663 S B

s. 2 (a)—Whether 'bankar' 'lahkar' and 'phalkar' incomes are incomes from agriculture or lands used for agricultural purposes, is question of fact—Duty of authorities to state facts when stating case to High Court.

"Bankar" is income derived from the sale of wood from jungles, whereas 'lahkar' is income from letting lands and trees for cultivation of lac. "Phalkar" is income from the fruit of jungle trees and bushes. The question whether the income from these sources can be said to be derived from land used for agricultural purposes or from agriculture, is in the main, one of fact and the authorities should bear this in mind when stating a case to the High Court. If the land is not so used, then the income is not taxable under the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act. THE PROVINCE OF BIHAR v. PRATAP UDAI NATH SAHIDEO OF RATUGARH Pat. 203 S B

ss. 2 (a), 3, 4—Bengal Cess Act (IX of 1880), ss. 4, 41, 100, 105 — Collector acting under Cess Act acts as officer of Crown as such and not as agent of 'local authorities'—Bihar Act is ultra vires only in so far as it covers income from revenue free agricultural land in a Municipality.

Under the Ben. Cess Act, 1880, the rate of cess to be levied is fixed by the District Board and the proceeds are paid into a district fund. The assessment and collection of cess is however, ordinarily made by the Collector, and the Collector, when he performs his duties under the Cess Act is in no way a servant of the District Boards. He does not act under their supervision but under the supervision of the higher Govt. authorities. Hence when the Collector performs the duties cast upon him by the Ben. Cess Act he performs them as Collector that is, as an officer of the Crown and not as an agent of the local authorities.

What s. 100, of the Ben. Cess Act empowers the Board of Revenue to do is to invest a person with the powers of a Collector under the Act. Once such a person is invested with such powers, he is, as far as those duties are concerned, a Collector, and he performs his duties not as a servant or agent of the District Boards but as a Collector. Even such a person must be regarded as a Collector and he performs his duties as a Collector, that is, as an officer of the Crown as such. The cess in Bihar is therefore assessed and collected by officers of the Crown as such and that being so there is no real difference between the two definitions of the "agricultural income" in the Income Tax Act and the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act as far as the assessment and collection of cess is concerned.

Revenue free agricultural land in a Municipality is subject to a local rate collected under a Bihar and Orissa Municipal Act, and, therefore, comes within the definition given in the Agri. Income Tax Act. As the local rate, however, is collected by the servants of the Municipality and not by the officers of the Crown as such, the income derived from such lands is not within the definition of agricultural income given in the Income Tax Act. Hence, in so far as the definition of "agricultural income" in the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, covers income from revenue free agricultural land in a Municipality it is ultra vires but this does not make the whole Act ultra vires. JHALAK PRASAD SINGH v. PROVINCE OF BIHAR Pat. 663 S B ss. 2 (a), 3, 4—Income Tax Act (IX of 1922), s. 2 (1)—Bihar Act whether ultra vires as a whole because definition of "agricultural income" given in Act is wider or narrower than that given in Income Tax Act.

The omission to include (c) of the definition contained in the Income Tax Act in the definition contained in the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act cannot make the latter Act ultra vires. In effect the Bihar Govt. are proposing to tax less than they are entitled to do. The greater must include the less, and if the Provincial

Govt. are entitled to tax all agricultural income as defined in s. 2 (1), Income Tax Act, then they are clearly entitled to tax a part only of such income. It is impossible to hold that the omission to tax some forms of agricultural income could render the whole of the Bihar Act ultra vires and of no effect. JHALAK PRASAD SINGH v. PROVINCE OF BIHAR Pat. 663 S B

s. 2 (a), 6 (b)—Whether non-recurring premia or salami paid to proprietors of land when granting lease, is agricultural income of proprietors within s. 2 (a) is question of fact—Test of determination—Held, such payments were not agricultural income and could not be taxed.

It is impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule that a salami or premium can in no case be taxable. The question in each case would depend on the facts and circumstances of that particular case. Salami may in certain cases be regarded as payment of rent in advance and in such cases the salami could rightly be regarded as income. Where, however, salami cannot be regarded as payment of rent in advance it cannot be regarded as income and would, therefore, not be taxable. Where the premium or salami represents the whole or part of the price of the land, it could not be income. Income connotes a periodical monetary return coming in with some sort of regularity, or expected regularity, from definite sources. The premium, or salami, which is paid once for all, is not a recurring payment and does not satisfy the test of income.

It is for the income-tax authorities to show that there do exist facts which would make the salami income. Prima facie, salami is not income.

Where it is impossible upon the facts as stated to say that the single non-recurring premia and salamis paid to the assessee once only as consideration for the settlement of agricultural land at the time of granting of a lease constituted a part of the assessee's income, it cannot be held to be agricultural income within the meaning of s. (a) of the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act and is not assessable under that Act. THE PROVINCE OF BIHAR v. PRATAP UDAI NATH SAH DEO OF RATUGARH Pat. 203 S B ss. 2 (a), 6 (b), 25 (6)—Cess imposed by Bengal Cess Act (IX of 1880), on tenure-holders and raiyats and collected by proprietors of land, can be assessed as agricultural income of latter as defined in s. 2 (a).

The cess as imposed by the Ben. Cess Act (Act IX of 1880 B. C.) on tenure-holders and raiyats and collected by the proprietors of the land can be assessed as agricultural income of the latter as defined in s. 2 (a), Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act. The cess received by the proprietors of land from the tenure-holders and raiyats is income derived from land used for agricultural purposes. All such land is expressly made liable to cess by the Ben. Cess Act and it is payable by the tenure-holders and raiyats by reason of their relation to the land, and further it is received by the proprietors by reason of their rights as proprietors of the land. The liability to pay such cess and the right to receive it only exists as long as the relationship of proprietor and tenure-holder or proprietor and raiyat exists. When the proprietor ceases to be a proprietor, he no longer has any right to the cess and similarly when the interests of the tenure-holder or raiyat cease, their liability to pay cess comes to an end. The liability to pay and the right to receive cess is so closely connected with the land that it can truly be said that it is income derived from the land. That being so, the cess forms part of Regulation (I of 1793)—Bihar Agricultural Income Tax Act repeals by necessary implication provisions of Regulation I of 1793 which are inconsistent with it.

A subsequent general Act will repeal the provisions of an earlier special Act if the provisions of the subsequent Act are clear and unambiguous and clearly apply to the matters dealt with by the earlier special legislation. Under the Bihar Agri. The Court is, therefore, bound to hold that the Bihar Agri. Regulation (I of 1793)—Govt. of India Act, 1935 s. 108 (2)—Regulation I of 1793 is not Act of Parliament—Bihar Act is not therefore invalid by reason of s. 108 (2), Government of India Act.

The Ben. Regulation I of 1793 is an enactment of the Governor-General in Council and not an enactment of the Parliament in England, and hence the Bihar Agri. Income Tax Act, is not invalid by reason of the provisions of s. 108 (2) (a), Govt. of India Act.

The expression "Governor-General's Act in s. 108 (2) (b) refers to Acts which are contemplated in s. 44, Govt. of India Act, 1935, that is to Acts enacted by the Governor-General after the Govt. of India Act came into force. The Permanent Settlement Regulation was in no sense an Act of the Governor-General but was an Act of the then Governor-General in Council. That being so s. 108 (2) (b), Govt. of India Act, can in no way render the legislation invalid. JHALAK PRASAD SINGH v. PROVINCE OF BIHAR Pat. 663 S B Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act (VII of 1939), s. 11—Decree on promissory note passed before commencement of Act—Application under s. 11 for instalments—If can be allowed.

A obtained a decree against B on the basis of a promissory note before the enactment of Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1939. In execution of the decree B applied under s. 11 of the Money-lenders Act of 1939, to pay the decretal amount by instalments. The Court rejected the application on the ground that the provisions of the Act regarding instalments did not apply to a suit on a promissory note; s. 25 (1)—By-laws framed by Jharia Mines Board of Health, s. 2, Part III, validity—Word 'nuisance' means nuisance affecting public health.

Held, that the liability under the promissory note had merged into the decretal debt before the

Section 2 of Part III of the by-laws framed by the Jharia Mines Board of Health under s. 25 (1) of the Bihar and Orissa Mining Settlements Act, is valid. It is quite consistent with the provision of s. 25 (1) (x) of the Mining Settlements Act. The definition of nuisance in s. 1 (h) of the by-laws framed under s. 25 (1) of the Bihar and Orissa Mining Settlements Act by the Jharia Mines Board of Health is not exhaustive. The definition is no doubt unreasonable in so far as it makes the Medical Officer of Health the sole judge of 'nuisance' and leaves no option to the Court but blindly to act upon his opinion. But as the definition is not exhaustive the Court must in each case find out whether there has been any nuisance affecting the public health. JHARIA MINES BOARD v. KARTAR AD. DHARM Pat. 403

Section 15 of the Bihar Restoration of Bakasht

Lands and Reduction of Arrears of Rent Act has no application to the case, where the rent of the holding is not a money rent but is produce rent. Such a holding comes within s. 16, and proceedings for reduction of rent of such a holding can properly be made under s. 16 of the Act. The Rent Reduction Officer, therefore, has jurisdiction to reduce the rent of such a holding. SREE KANT LAL v. AJODHYA SINGH Pat. 99 ss. 16, 18—Application under s. 16—All three conditions under s. 18, if must be complied with.

Section 18 (1) of the Bihar Restoration of Bakasht Lands and Reduction of Arrears of Rent Act, 1938, deals with disposal of applications under s. 16. The Collector must dismiss the application of the tenants unless the latter have complied with the three requirements of the sub-section, namely, (2) (a) (i), (2) (a) (ii) and (2) (a) (iii). If they have not complied with the whole three, they have no right to claim a reduction of rent. SREE KANT LAL v. AJODHYA SINGH Pat. 99 ss. 16, 18—Inherent want of jurisdiction and wrong exercise of jurisdiction, distinction.

Where there is no inherent want of jurisdiction the revenue authorities have jurisdiction under s. 18 to entertain the application under s. 16. It may well be that they had to decide three facts in favour of the applicants before they could give them relief, and in a sense the existence of these three facts would be necessary to confer jurisdiction; but it is for the Court to consider whether the facts gave it jurisdiction to grant the relief, and the fact that it found the facts wrongly cannot make its decision wholly null and void. Where it had jurisdiction to entertain the matter, it is no answer to say that it had decided wrongly in the exercise of its jurisdiction. SREE KANT LAL v. AJODHYA SINGH Pat. 99

ss. 16, 18—Order reducing rent and granting instalments made—Executing Court, if can sell property under original decree.

The executing Court has no right whatsoever to sell the property once the order is made reducing the arrears and granting instalments. Section 19 (2) of the Act provides for the decree-holder's rights should the judgment-debtor default in performance of the new order. A sale under the original decree in contravention of the plain terms of the Collector's order is a sale wholly without jurisdiction, and must be set aside. SREE KANT LAL v. AJODHYA SINGH Pat. 99 ss. 16, 18—Relationship of landlord and tenant existing when rent accrued—Whether must be subsisting when application is made under s. 16 (1).

If a relationship of landlord and raiyat existed between the parties during the period in which the rent accrued, then it matters not whether such relationship is subsisting when application is made under s. 16 (1) of the Act to reduce the arrears due to the ex-landlord. If a landlord transfers his ownership and sues for arrears of rent, he can only obtain a money decree; but that is no reason at all why the tenant should be deprived of a benefit which is conferred upon him by the plain terms of the Act, namely, a right to claim reduction of arrears against the person entitled to receive the rent, namely the ex-landlord. *SREE KANT LAL v. — ss. 16, 18, 19—Effect of reduction of arrears under ss. 16 and 18.

Where the decree has been reduced and converted into an instalment decree it gives the decree-holder no right whatsoever to proceed with the execution except in a particular manner when default is made in payment of instalments. The effect of reduction of arrears under ss. 16 and 18 is dealt with under s. 19 of the Act. It is clear from s. 19 of the Act that the moment the Rent Reduction Officer has reduced the arrears and granted instalments, execution of the decree as it originally stood cannot proceed. SREE KANT LAL v. AJODHYA SINGH Pat. 99

— ss. 18, 16—Execution—Executing Court can ignore orders made without jurisdiction.

The decision of the Collector cannot be treated as wholly null and void for want of jurisdiction merely because he has decided wrongly that the tenant was entitled to relief. If the order is wholly without jurisdiction, the executing Court, of course, would be at liberty to ignore it. The executing Court, however, cannot ignore an order made with jurisdiction, on, matter how erroneous it may be. Where the Revenue Officer acts with jurisdiction his order must be observed by the executing Court. SREE KANT LAL v. AJODHYA SINGH Pat. 99

— ss. 18, 16—Rent Reduction Officer reducing rent under s. 18 on application under s. 16

—Non-compliance with all conditions under s. 18
—Rent reduction officer, whether acts without jurisdiction.

Where the judgment-debtors are occupancy raiyats paying produce rent they are entitled to make an application to the Rent Reduction Officer under s. 16 of the Act and the Rent Reduction Officer has full jurisdiction to call upon the decree-holder to answer the application and to hear the parties and make such orders as he deems proper in the circumstances. There is a confusion between the existence of jurisdiction and the exercise of jurisdiction. A Court has jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right. If it decides wrong, the wronged party can only take the course prescribed by law for setting matters right; and if that course is not taken, the decision, however, wrong cannot be disturbed. SREE KANT LAL v. AJODHYA SINGH Pat. 99

Bihar Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885, as amended in 1934), s. 26-N, whether applies where transferee had been lawfully ejected in execution of proper rent decree before amending Act came into force.

Though s. 26 N, Bihar Ten. Act, was expressly made retrospective it could not affect rent decrees which had been obtained and which had been fully executed previous to the section coming into force. The section would apply to all cases which had not been the subject-matter of litigation or which were actually the subject-matter of litigation when the amending act came into force, namely, on June 10, 1935. The section can have no application whatsoever when the transferee had been lawfully ejected before the Amending Act of 1934, came into operation.

Hence where a decree when obtained was a proper rent decree and in execution of that decree the auction purchaser had obtained the possession of the lands purchased by him and ejected the transferees of the tenant in due course of law before the Amending Act of 1934 was even passed and long before the Act actually came into force, s. 26-N cannot affect the rights of the auction purchaser. RAJA JHA v. Section 177-A, Bihar Ten. Act, gives exemptions which are not, in terms at any rate, confined to rent execution.

Under the Proviso to s. 177-A (b) the houses of raiyats and under-raiyats are saved from execution sales when the execution relates to decrees for arrears of rent due in respect of lands other than the sites of the houses. But execution against the site of a house on a decree for arrears of rent due in respect of other land would obviously be a money execution as distinguished from a rent execution, and it is precisely in such cases that sub-s. (b) of s. 177-A exempts houses from sale. It cannot be said that s. 177-A does not apply to money executions, and that, therefore, the house of the judgment-debtor can be sold. But what cl. (b) of s. 177-A saves is a house belonging to the raiyat and occupied by him as such. BIKRAMA LAL v. RAM RAN BIJAYA PRASAD SINGH Pat. 226 —License prohibiting accused from selling liquor outside his shop—Accused taking out liquor from cask in shop, bottling it and delivering to servants in shop for transmission to customers at their houses—Sale held, completed within licensed area—Accused held could not be convicted under s. 45 (c).

The accused who was a licensed vendor of country liquor was prohibited by a clause in his license from selling liquor outside the shop mentioned in the license. He took out quantity of liquor out of a big cask, bottled it and delivered it to his servants in the shop premises and the servants delivered the bottles to the customers in their houses and recovered the price there:

Held, that the servant of the accused in the circumstances could very well be treated as a bailee for the purpose of transmission to the buyer, within the meaning of s. 23 (2), Sale of Goods Act, and delivery to such servant, which admittedly took place in the licensed place, would be effective delivery to the buyer himself. As the sale, therefore, was completed within the licensed area the fact that the price was paid at the houses of the customers was immaterial for the completion of sale does not depend upon payment of the price of the goods sold. The accused could not, therefore, be convicted under s. 45 (c), Bom. Abkari Act. EMPEROR v. KUNVERJI KAVASJI KAVARANA Bom. 302

The secretary of a mill is not as such liable to be convicted under s. 159 as being in control of the premises. Prima facie, the secretary of a mill would be a person to attend to the office and clerical work, but he would certainly not be a person to control the working of the mill or to see in what manner the waste water is to be discharged. s. 15 (1)—Member of joint family incurring debt in individual capacity—Creditor attaching his share in house belonging to family—Debtor dying—Brothers of deceased obtaining certificate under s. 15 (1) in respect of debt of deceased brother—Creditor, if can proceed with execution in respect of share attached by him

A member of a joint family had incurred a debt in his individual capacity on a bond. He was sued on this bond and a decree was passed against him. In execution of this decree the creditor attached a house. His brothers, three in number, raised an objection to the attachment and succeeded in getting their three-quarters interest in the house released, but the attachment in respect of the debtors' brother remaining quarter share subsisted. After the death of the debtor his brothers made an application to the Debt Conciliation Board in respect of their own family debts some of which were conciliated and an agreement under s. 12 (2) of the Debt Conciliation Act followed, and a certificate under s. 15 (1) of the Act was issued in respect of them. Among these debts was the debt due by their deceased brothers and this debt fell within the ambit of the certificate under s. 15 (1). When the creditor attempted to carry on with his execution proceedings in respect of the quarter share of the house which he had attached, the executing Court held that the execution could not proceed in view of the certificate granted by the Debt Conciliation Board; but the Court directed that the attachment should continue. In appeal the order was set aside the Court holding that the debt was not a debt of the three brothers, at all, and he ordered the execution case to proceed according to law :

Held, that despite the wide definition of "debt" in s. 2 of the Debt Conciliation Act, this debt was not a debt of the three brothers at all, there was no liability on their part to pay the debt at all, since they had not inherited any property from their deceased brother. The interest which their deceased brother had in the family property disappeared on his death except in so far as that interest had been attached. The brothers, then, had placed before the Debt Conciliation Board a fictitious debt in order to avoid the embarrassment which would arise by the sale of the deceased brother's interest in the attached house, and the issue of a certificate in respect of a debt which was not the debt of the persons making the application to the Debt Conciliation Board was one beyond the Board's jurisdiction and was ineffective in so far as that particular debt was concerned. *BAPUSAHEB v. The District Judge acting under s. 14, C. P. Local Fund Audit Act is not intended to act as a Court but as a special tribunal, in much the same way as it does under the Workmen's Compensation Act. The appeal from his decision to High Court is not from a Court but from a Special Tribunal. Moreover the jurisdiction which s. 14 confers is not revisional, nor can the "appeal" to the High Court be called a "reference." The will further provided for a monthly allowance at the rate of Rs. 8 a month to be paid to the testator's youngest daughter, who was a widow, out of the testator's estate so long as she lived :

Held, that even though the testator did not provide that the allowances were to be paid from specific property, the allowances granted by the will formed charges. UPENDRA NATH DAS v. DURLAV CHANDRA KUNDU Cal. 133

Decree creating charge and further directing judgment-debtor to do particular thing and decree merely declaring charge—Difference—Transferee for value without notice of charge declared by decree, whether takes free of charge—Property subject to charge sold—Burden to prove want of notice.

If a Court orders a defendant to pay the plaintiff a certain sum of money on a specified date and directs that if it is not paid property which it specifies is to be sold, those orders must be carried out and the judgment-debtor cannot evade them by transferring the property so charged to another, however, innocent that other may be. The doctrine of estoppel by record applies. The doctrine of lis pendens may also apply in some cases, though not necessarily always. But whether lis pendens applies or not the doctrine of estoppel by record does. In such a case the transferee from the judgment-debtor after decree is bound to carry out its orders in the same way and to the same extent as the judgment-debtor himself. It is not necessary for the decree-holder to sue the transferee all over again. But when the decree is merely declaratory and does not direct the doing of a particular thing, that is to say, when it is not executable, then an important difference arises, and the transferee, though bound by the decision in the sense that it is res judicata, is not necessarily bound to the same extent and in the same way as the judgment-debtor: pleas are available to him which would not be available to his transferor. He is not estopped from putting in issue the consequences of that charge because that could not have been put in issue.

Where a charge decree is merely declaratory and thus incapable of execution, the bona fide purchaser for value without notice takes free from the charge, the reason being that the legal estate prevails over a mere equity except where the legal owner takes with notice.

Where a decree has declared a charge on certain property and that property is subsequently sold, the burden of proving want of notice of charge is on the purchaser. GHASIRAM v. KUNDANBAI Nag. 861

Decree merely declaring charge and not providing for its execution, whether operates as notice of charge.

When the decree provides for the payment of future maintenance and makes provision expressly or impliedly for its own execution, then it does not put an end to the suit and consequently whether the matter be placed on the ground of lis pendens or on that of estoppel by record (the two do not necessarily overlap) the result is the same. But when the decree is merely declaratory and inexecutable, the suit qua suit is at an end and then these rules do not apply and the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act (VI of 1876), s. 3—Word 'heir' in s. 3 scope of.

As the Act is obscure the word 'heir' has been loosely used in the Act and may be taken to include a person who has a right to succeed in law to the holder. MON MOHAN SINGH v. RAGHU NANDAN SINGH Pat. 23 ss. 3, 9—Word 'alienation' in s. 3, meaning of—Holder, whether prohibited from making testamentary disposition.

The word "alienation" ordinarily means alienation of all kinds but applying the principle of ejusdem generis as the general words in s. 3 follow specific words and again are followed by specific words, the word alienation means an alienation inter vivos only. In other words the prohibition against alienation in the Chota Nagpur Encum. Estates Act is a prohibition against alienation inter vivos and does not affect the testamentary power of the holder. MON MOHAN SINGH v. RAGHU NANDAN SINGH Pat. 23

s. 9—Object of the Act explained.

The object of Chota Nagpur Encum. Estates Act is that the manager shall have unfettered power of management and control over the property so that he may apply the rents and profits of the land to speedily relieve the holder's estates from the burdens created on it by the holder before the provisions of the Act were brought into operation for his benefit. The Act does not make the manager the holder of the estate but merely prohibits the holder in his own interest from exercising the acts of ownership so that they may not interfere with the wide powers given to the manager to manage the estate. MON MOHAN SINGH v. RAGHU NANDAN SINGH Pat. 23

Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI of 1908), ss. 46, 47, 6, 4—Persons protected under ss. 46 and 47—Person holding immediately under raiyat, if protected—Under-raiyat, if raiyat—S. 60, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), applicability to case.

Section 46, 47, Chota Nag. Ten. Act, are intended to protect the rights of a *raiya*t only. The definition of "*raiya*t" in s. 6 is wide enough to include an under-*raiya*t: but cl. (2) of s. 6 makes the position clear. A person shall not be deemed to be a *raiya*t, unless he holds land either immediately under a proprietor or immediately under a tenure-holder or immediately under a Mundari khunt-kattidar. Where a person does not claim to hold the land under a proprietor or a tenure-holder or a Mundari khunt-kattidar, he cannot be held to be a *raiya*t in the sense in which the expression has been used in the Chota Nagpur Ten. Act though he may be an under-*raiya*t. There are only three classes of *raiya*ts mentioned in this section, and these are occupancy *raiya*ts, non-occupancy *raiya*ts and *raiya*ts having khunt-katti rights. Under-*raiya*ts, on the other hand are tenants, holding whether immediate or mediately, under-*raiya*ts.

Where the money decree-holder is not trying to sell the occupancy right in the lands but merely trying to sell the shop or house and such right, title and interest as the judgment-debtor who is not a *raiya*t has in the land in question, such interest cannot be said to be protected under s. 47. There is nothing in s. 60, Civil P. C. to prevent the sale of such judgment-debtor's interest in the land in dispute. The shop or house which has been erected by him certainly belongs to him, and he has undoubtedly a disposing power over the profits of the land which he may exercise for his own benefit. The case, therefore, comes within the category of those properties which can be sold under the provisions of s. 60 of the Civil P. C. RAMPRATAP MARWARI v. LACHMAN MISTRY Pat. 441

s. 208—Sale under s. 208 entirely without jurisdiction.

Where a sale under s. 208 is entirely without jurisdiction it does not affect the interest of any of the judgment-debtors even though the sale of their interest under s. 210 (b) might be valid. NEHAL KHAN v. FELU DOME Pat. 435 ss. 208, 213, 258—Decree obtained against some tenants of holding only—Order of sale of holding in execution is void—S. 208 does not authorise such sale.

Section 208, Chota Nag. Ten. Act does not authorise the sale of a holding in execution of a decree obtained against some only of the tenants of the holding and an order directing the sale of the holding in execution of such a decree is void and without jurisdiction. NEHAL KHAN v. FELU DOME Pat. 435

ss. 213, 258, 208—S. 213, applicability of, where sale is challenged on ground of being void for want of jurisdiction in executing Court—Decree effective only against part of tenancy interest—Sale of holding in execution is nullity—Suit by tenant not impleaded in rent suit for declaration of title to land is not barred by s. 258.

Section 213, does not apply where the sale is challenged not on the ground of any irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it but on the ground that it is void for want of jurisdiction in the executing Court. No application is needed to set aside a null sale. When a decree is effective against only a part of the tenancy interest, a sale held in execution of it is entirely without jurisdiction and does not affect the interest of any of the judgment-debtors. Where one of the tenants of a holding is not impleaded in the suit for rent, a part of the tenancy interest is not represented in the suit and the decree obtained in the suit does not affect the interest of the tenant not impleaded and the sale held in execution of that decree is a nullity. A suit brought by such tenant for declaration of his title to the land is not, therefore, barred by s. 258. NEHAL KHAN v. FELU DOME Pat. 435

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 2 (12)—Interest on mesne profits, if can be awarded as mesne profits.

s. 10—Stay of suit filed on original side of High Court pending decision in previous suit filed in mofussil—Procedure—Application to be made on original side to Judge trying suit.

The proper and convenient procedure to stay a suit which has been instituted on the original side of the High Court until the decision of a previously instituted suit in the mofussil Court, is to apply under s. 10, Civil P. C., on the original side of the High Court to the Judge trying the suit and not on the appellate side.

The Judge on the original side can, if necessary, restrain the parties from proceeding with the suit in the mofussil Court. If the Judge declines to make an order under s. 10 an appeal would then lie to an Appellate Bench. NAGAPPA CHANNAPPA TAMBRALI v. RAMSING JESSASING Bom. 510 ss. 10, 151, 115—Order under s. 10 refusing stay of subsequent suit pending previous one—Order though not open to revision held could be interfered with under s. 151.

The defendant B did not object to the valuation put by plaintiff A of the suit at Rs. 300 but later on when apparently he thought that he had not raised a defence which might have been of benefit to him he approached another Court over the same subject-matter, put a valuation of Rs. 1,200 and virtually created a situation in which conflicting decisions may be given by two different Courts. The Court in which the subsequent suit was filed by B, refused to stay it under s. 10, Civil P. C., pending the previous suit on the ground that the Court in which the suit was previously instituted by A had no pecuniary jurisdiction to try it:

Held, that the order of the Court under s. 10 refusing to stay subsequent suit was an interlocutory one and it could not be subject of revision. The powers conferred by s. 151, Civil P. C., should not be exercised lightly but the case was eminently one in which they should be exercised in order to avoid "an idle multiplicity of suit" by ordering the subsequent suit to be stayed pending the decision of the previous suit. WAQF MASJID v. s. 11—Previous suit by wife for divorce—No alternative plea for declaration that she is not wife—Subsequent suit for such declaration, if barred.

It cannot be said that a person petitioning the Court for a divorce as a husband or wife ought to add an alternative plea asking for a declaration that he or she is not a husband or wife at all, because the marriage has long ago ceased to exist. The matters are so dissimilar that their union not only might but must certainly lead to confession. Consequently the failure of the wife in earlier suit for divorce to raise alternative plea for declaration that her marriage has ceased to exist will not bar a subsequent suit for such declaration. U SEIN v. s. 15—Suit triable both by Village Court and District Munsif—S. 15 does not apply to such suit.

The District Munsif's Court is regulated by the provision of the Civil P. C. The Court of the Village Munsif is not. The procedure of the Village Courts is very special and decidedly of comprehensive character. However, although the provisions of the Lim. Hence where a suit is triable both by the Village Court and the District Munsif s. 15, Civil P. Civil Procedure Code—contd.

Where in spite of the notice under s. 34, Ben. Agri. The decree-holder obtained a rent decree against the petitioner and in execution of that decree, brought the holding to sale. The auction-purchaser thereafter deposited in Court the whole of the purchase money. The judgment-debtor then applied for setting aside the sale under s. 174, Ben. Ten. Act. Subsequently the judgment-debtor made an application before a Debt Settlement Board for the settlement of his debts in which he included the debt due under the rent decree referred to above. Upon that a notice was issued under s. 34, Ben. Agri. Debtors' Act to the Court in which the execution case was proceeding. The execution Court refused to stay further proceedings and proceeded with the application for setting aside sale.

Held, that the order complained of was an order relating to execution and that although the auction-purchaser was a party to the proceeding it was still an order which came within s. 47, of the Code the question at issue being one in which the judgment-debtor on the one hand and the decree-holder on the other were really interested. This being so, the order was open to appeal and the application under s. 115, of the Code was not, accordingly competent. Mukimannessa Chowdhurani v. Rameswar Shukul

It is true that if he is sued upon a liability of his testator he has the protection of s. 52, Civil P. In execution of a decree the judgment-debtor was arrested but was released on his furnishing security that he would apply within one month to be declared as insolvent. He failed to apply within one month but the decree-holder made no attempt to execute the decree for over three and half years.

Held, that the obvious inference was that the decree-holder realized that the judgment-debtor had substantially, if not technically, complied with the order of the Court, and that the purpose for which the security was given was substantially fulfilled. It would be wholly inequitable at such late stage to order that the security should be forfeited. Jitendra Mullick v. Alla Bux Cal. 103

s. 73—S. 73 enacts mere rule of procedure

—It does not clothe decree-holder with right which he does not possess.

Section 73 enacts a mere rule of procedure and not a rule of substantive law. It merely enacts a rule by which decree-holders, in specified cases, can resort to a cheap and speedy procedure for the realization of their decrees. It does not, however, clothe a decree-holder with a right which he does not possess. It does not enlarge the rights given to a decree-holder by his decree, nor does it cut down the rights to which a decree-holder may be entitled by the decree in his favour. Section 73 cannot, therefore, be invoked to entitle a decree-holder to satisfy his decree from assets which he could not touch if s. 73 was not on the statute book. Conversely the provisions of s. 73 cannot be utilized to deprive a decree-holder from satisfying his decree from assets which he would have been otherwise entitled to follow in execution. *HOTI LAL v. s. 73—Word "passed" significance of.

Per Iqbal Ahmed and Verma, J.J. Bajpai, J. dissenting.—The expression "passed against the same judgment-debtor" in s. 73 must be liberally construed. The object of s. 73 being to provide for rateable distribution of assets upon which two or more decree-holders have equal claims, the words "passed against the same judgment-debtor" must be interpreted as referring more to the property which a judgment-debtor represents than to the person against whom execution has been sought.

Where therefore a decree for certain amount has been obtained by X against Y on a pro-note executed by Y and on the death of Y one A obtains a money decree against Y's son Z personally and against the assets of Y in the hands of Z and C the sons of Y on the basis of a promissory note executed by Y and Z, the decree obtained by X and A are against the same judgment-debtor and s. 73 applies.

The applicability of s. 92, Civil P. C., does not depend upon whether the defendants had or had not taken objection to the form of the suit. The form of the suit is laid down by law. The Legislature requires that if a suit of this kind is to be instituted it must be instituted in a particular way, and it is not open either to the plaintiffs or to the defendants, as it were, to contract themselves out of this section and to say in effect "we do not mind if the law in this matter is or is not observed." *MULCHAND CHANDUMAL v. In a suit for framing a scheme, the preliminary objection of the defendant that the Court had no power to frame a scheme was overruled. In revision, the High Court upheld the defendant's objection and dismissed the suit. On this order being communicated, the lower Court passed a formal order dismissing the suit.

Held, that the High Court's order was not final but interlocutory and was inappropriate inasmuch as the High Court dismissed the suit itself instead of directing the lower Court to dispose of it according to law. The order fell under s. 105 (1), Civil P. C., and appeal from the decree was competent by virtue of s. 105, since the order affected the decision of the lower Court when passing the decree. *T. S. The plaintiffs brought a suit for a declaration that a certain property could not be attached and sold in execution of the certificate. They rested their claim in the suit on the ground that they had purchased it in execution of a mortgage decree obtained by them against the persons who owned the property. The suit was valued at Rs. 7,699 odd, because that was the amount for which the certificate was issued. The suit was decreed by the trial Court but on appeal the High Court dismissed it. The appeal was also valued at Rs. 7,699. But the property in respect of which the certificate was issued was worth more than Rs. 10,000:

Per Wadsworth and Stodart, JJ., Burn, J., contra.—The possession of a Receiver pendente lite must be deemed to be the possession of the party who is ultimately declared successful.

Plaintiff's suit for possession was decreed. The defendant went in appeal to the High Court. A Receiver was appointed by the Court during the pendency of the appeal. High Court allowed the appeal and the defendant took over possession from the Receiver. In the meantime the plaintiff went in appeal to the Privy Council who reversed the decree of the High Court and restored the decree of the Court of first instance. In the application by the plaintiff under s. 144, Civil P. C.:

Held, per Wadsworth and Stodart, JJ., Burn, J., contra.—(1) that the Receiver's possession must be deemed to be the possession of the plaintiff who must be deemed to have been dispossessed when the defendant took over possession from him in pursuance of the erroneous decree of the High Court and hence the plaintiff was entitled to possession and mesne profits during the period he was out of possession by way of restitution under s. 144;

(2) that the fact that the plaintiff was refused a decree for mesne profits by the Court of the first instance and the High Court did not deprive him of his right to claim the same under s. 144 from his opponent after his dispossession by the latter in consequence of High Court's decree which was subsequently reversed. *ZAMINDAR OF SANNOKHEMEDI v. The words might mean that the parties are to be put in the position they would have occupied had the right decree been passed instead of the wrong decree; or secondly, they may mean that the parties are to be put in the position that they would have occupied had no decree at all been passed; or the words may mean simply that the parties are to be put in the position which they would have occupied had it not been that a wrong decree had been passed. The last interpretation is the correct one. There is nothing in the words of s. 144 to justify the conclusion that it was the intention of the Code to give to the person claiming restitution and better position than that which he occupied at the time when the wrong decree was passed and this is what has to be inferred if he has to be put in the position which he would have occupied had the right decree been passed. The correct procedure is to take the position as it stood immediately before the wrong decree, to find out what would be the position of the ultimately successful party as on that date, having regard to the fact that the proceeding terminated and to award to the successful party restitution in the shape of any profits wrongfully received under the erroneous decree or as a direct consequence thereof. *ZAMINDAR OF SANNOKHEMEDI v. There is of course no objection to the sureties being made parties in such proceedings, as they are vitally interested in the amount that may be found due by way of restitution. ss. 151, 54, O. XX, r. 18—Partition suit—Decree for possession of plaintiff's share—Application of plaintiff under s. 151 for proclamation in villages that plaintiff obtained certain share in them, allowed—Legality of procedure.

Held, that the decree was not drawn up in proper form according to O. XX, r. 18 and the Court had no jurisdiction to pass such an order under s. 151 as the remedy was provided by the Code under s. 54 and O. XX, r. 18. SUKHPAL DAS v. KEDAR NATH

O. I, r. 3—"Necessity" and "proper" party, distinction between.

The distinction between a "necessary" and a "proper" party to an action appeal or other proceedings, is well recognized. A "necessary" party is one, whose presence on the record is enjoined by law, or in whose absence no effective decision can at all be given. Without such party the action, appeal or proceeding is not properly constituted and is liable to be dismissed on this ground alone. A "proper" party, on the other hand, is one whose presence is not essential for the constitution of the suit appeal or proceeding, but whom it may nevertheless be desirable or even necessary, to have before the Court in order to properly, or completely and adequately, adjudicate on the matter involved. It is the duty of the person bringing the action appeal or proceeding to implead all "necessary" parties to it and his omission to do so is a fatal defect which if not remedied, with the permission of the Court within the period prescribed by law, results in its dismissal. No such duty, however, is cast on him in the case of a "proper" party nor does the absence of such a person

A mortgage-deed provided as under: ".....It would be open to the mortgagee at his will to secure payment of the principal together with the balance of interest by bringing the mortgaged property to sale at any time. It would be open to the mortgagee to let the interest accumulate till the time provided by law for payment, or to obtain the payment of interest and compound interest by bringing a separate suit. In this contingency the principal mortgage amount shall remain secured on the mortgaged property". So far as the payment of interest and compound interest was concerned, no reference was made to the mortgaged property in this clause. The mortgagee instituted a suit for interest only and got a decree. Subsequently he brought another suit for principal and interest:

Held, that the subsequent suit was not barred under O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C., since the first suit was based on a cause of action distinct from the second.

Held, also as the mortgage-deed contained a separate personal covenant for the payment of interest and compound interest, such a covenant could not be ignored simply because in the previous suit the stipulation in the mortgage deed was not made the basis of the claim. In order to ascertain whether the suit is barred by the provisions of O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C., it is necessary to consider what facts had to be proved in the first suit and what facts have to be proved in the second suit.

The defendants who were proprietors of a firm of a military contractors gave a sub-contract to the plaintiff for the supply of goods and the arrangement between the parties was that the plaintiff should submit his bills to the defendants and the latter should realize the money from the military department and should thereafter pay it to the plaintiff after deducting a commission of 5 per cent. The plaintiff instituted a suit for recovery of a specific sum of money, which admittedly had reference to specific bills submitted by the plaintiff to the defendants. Subsequently the plaintiff filed another suit against the defendants for rendition of accounts:

Held, that the causes of action and the matters to be proved were different in the two suits and hence the provisions of O. II, r. 2 did not operate as a bar to the second suit. Nor was the suit barred by s. 11. RADHA KISHEN v. IKRAM-UD-DIN All. 586

Plaintiff instituted a suit upon a mortgage executed in his favour by three brothers, admitted the mortgage in his written statement but subsequently died during the pendency of the suit. The plaintiff applied at first for his widow being brought on the record as his legal representative but subsequently did not press the point as the two brothers stated that they were members of a joint Hindu family and had, therefore, succeeded to the interest of their deceased brother in the house by survivorship. The suit was eventually decreed. Thereafter the widow instituted a suit for declaration that she was the owner of the house in dispute and it was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree obtained by the plaintiff on the basis of the mortgage. The suit was based on the allegation that a partition had been effected between the mem-

Held, that the deceased brother had already admitted the mortgage and his widow as his legal representative would have been bound by the admission. Her defence, if any, would have been the same as that of the co-mortgagors, who were impleaded and fought out the case. In the circumstances, the estate was effectively represented in the previous suit and the decision in the previous suit was binding on the widow. SHIMBU NATH v. BRAHAMWATI Lah. 304

O. VI, r. 5—Pleadings obscure—Court must call for particulars,

The rules of pleadings contained in O. VI of the Civil P. O. IX, r. 2—Plaintiff directed to file process fees by certain date—Part of process fees paid—Court fixing certain date for disposal of suit—Full process fees not paid—Court held had no jurisdiction to dismiss suit.

A person instituted a suit for rent and was directed to file process fees amounting to Rs. 3/6 by October 7, 1939. There were five defendants in the suit of whom one was a minor. On October 7, the plaintiff filed only Rs. 3. The Court pointed out that annas six was still due and fixed November 18, for the disposal of the suit. On that date the plaintiff applied for the appointment of a guardian ad litem for the minor defendant and filed a fee of Rs. 2 for that purpose. The defendants were not present. The balance of six annas due from the plaintiff was not paid and the suit was dismissed for default;

Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to dismiss the suit.

The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was entitled to the last male-holder's estate as the next reversioner. On the date fixed for hearing the Judge adopted extraordinary procedure in supersession of the provisions of O. XVIII, of examining the defendant (widow) and recording his admission as to the plaintiff's relation with the last male-holder with a view to obviate the recording of evidence and thus to expedite the disposal of the suit. Then both the parties closed their case without adducing any evidence and the Court decreed the suit:

Held, that the procedure amounted to a misuse of r. 2, O. X, since the examination of the defendant could not be said to be necessary in order to obtain information on any material question relating to the suit. The burden was on the plaintiff to establish by evidence that the estate of the last male-holder, their uncle, had vested in him, that he was the reversioner after the widow's death entitled to sue, and this burden could not be said to have been discharged by the statement. The fact that it was nobody's case that there existed any reversioner nearer than the plaintiff was no answer. The plaintiff was bound to go into the witness box and prove his title as the next reversioner after the death

O. XIII, r. 10—Record of another case sent for—Use of important documents in it, as evidence—Procedure to be followed.

The power to send for the record of another case and to inspect the same does not carry with it the power to treat the whole of the record or a part thereof as evidence in the case. If upon inspection of the record the trial Court came across an important document as the summons which in its opinion either threw important light on the question at issue or was of material assistance in ascertaining the truth, it is open to the Court to adopt proper proceedings to have the document brought on the record and proved according to law before such document can be used as evidence in the case. XXI, r. 2—Question of completed contract—S. 92, Evidence Act (I of 1872), whether bars setting up of contract as adjustment of decree.

A completed contract, which immediately extinguishes and takes the place of the decree is an adjustment within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. C. If, there is only an agreement to adjust the decree on the fulfilment of a future condition and the decree is still left in existence pending its fulfilment then there is no adjustment. It is, of course, a question to be decided in each case by the executing Court whether there has been a completed contract or not.

Two rent decrees were obtained by the same decree-holders against the same judgment-debtors. In execution proceedings objections were raised by some of the judgment-debtors on the ground that there was an arrangement under a registered deed between the decree-holders and the judgment-debtors which had the effect of an adjustment of the decree within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. C. By this instrument one of the decree-holders was appointed a manager of the interest of the 11 annas judgment-debtors and he was to manage the property on their behalf. This deed contained provisions as to how the property was to be managed and how after meeting the collection expenses, paying out commissions to the manager and the current rents due in respect of the tenure, the surplus that remained were to be distributed among decree-holders. To this document the other decree-holders as well as the remaining judgment-debtors were no parties :

Held, that the document was not a deed of adjustment of the decrees within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2. The decree-holders and the judgment-debtors who were not parties to it were not bound by it and the fact that the other decree-holders were paid some portion of the rents that subsequently fell due under the terms of the deed; did not make them parties to the deed, nor could they be presumed to have expressly or impliedly authorised the manager decree-holder to enter into any such agreement with the judgment-debtors on behalf of them all.

Held, further that the 11 annas judgment-debtors were entitled to credit to the extent of the amounts paid on their behalf under the arrangement embodied in the deed. JNANENDRA NARAYAN BAGCHI v. BHOLA NATH MONDAL Cal. 764

O. XXI, r. 11 (2) (b)—Order under O. XXI, r. 2 (b), not specifying addresses of judgment-debtors, is in accordance with law.

All that O. XXI, r. 11 (2) (b), Civil P. C., requires is that the names of the parties should be specified in the application. It says nothing about the addresses. O. XXI, r. 11 (2) (j), 12, 13—Particulars of movables to be attached not shown—Validity of application.

Order XX, r. 11 (2) (j), Civil P. C., states nothing about the specification of the property. All that the decree holder is required to set forth is the mode in which he seeks the assistance of the Court. This mode is sufficiently indicated when he states that he seeks attachment of the movables of the judgment-debtor. From the perusal of rr. 12 and 13 of O. XXI, it is clear that the Code has drawn a distinction between movables in the possession of the judgment-debtor and movables belonging to him but not in his possession and immovable property in his possession. When the Code itself draws such a distinction and does not ask for a list of movables when they are in the possession of the judgment-debtor, it is impossible to state that an application which does just what the Code requires is not in accordance with law. Consequently an application not specifying particulars of movable to be attached is in accordance with law. NATHMAL v. BALKRISHNA

Where no notice under O. XX, r. 22, Civil P. C., has been issued a sale in execution is wholly without jurisdiction. Mere issuing a notice is not, however, sufficient. The Court must be satisfied that the notice has been served on the person whom the Court regards as the proper recipient of the notice. Hence where notice is issued but not served at all, the sale held subsequently is wholly ineffective against the person against whom the notice under O. XXI, r. 22 was issued and this is not a case of irregularity or fraud in the publication or conduct of a sale so as to attract r. 90 but rather a case where no sale at all has been held. In the eye of the law the sale in such a case is a nullity and the person on whom the notice ought to have been served is entitled to maintain a suit for a declaration that the sale of property in execution was not binding on him and for recovery of possession of the same together with mesne profits. It is, therefore, the minor alone who can be held entitled to reside from the agreement or compromise, if he may choose it fit to do so, either on attaining majority or even before through his next friend or guardian. The sub-cl. (1) only contemplates two parties one of which is the minor and the other persons who have entered into a contract with the minor through his guardian. O. XXXIV, r. 4 (3)—Anomalous mortgage—Mortgagee's choice of remedy between sale and foreclosure—Discretion of Court in this respect.

There is in O. XXXIV, r. 4 (3), a perfectly clear statutory provision that in the case of an anomalous mortgage the mortgagee's choice of remedy, between a sale and foreclosure, is to be subject to the discretion of the Court. This discretion, as every other discretion vested in a Court must be exercised judicially and not arbitrarily. The consideration that it is open to a mortgagee, where a sale is ordered, to bid for it and purchase it himself, a good deal enlarges the scope of a Judge's discretion. UJAGAR LAL v. O. XXXIX, rr. 1, 2 (3)—Proceedings to enforce injunction, whether proceedings for contempt.

It is doubtless convenient to speak of the proceedings to enforce the injunction as proceedings for contempt, but the terminology is not strictly accurate. There is doubtless an element of punishment in the provisions for the enforcement of an injunction, but the main object surely is to see that the order of the Court is carried into effect. DULHIN JANAK NANDINI KUNWARI v. KEDAR NARAINS SINGH All. 166

The provisions in sub-r. (3) of r. 2 of O. XXXIX, Civil P. C., must have been intended to apply to injunctions issued under that rule. Sub-r. (3) of r. 2 does not apply to injunctions issued under r. 1. Consequently the proceedings for enforcement of an injunction under r. 1 are transferable under the provisions of s. 24, Civil P. O. XL, r. 1—Partition suit—Appointment of Receiver under O. XL—Title to property does not vest in Receiver—Court sanctioning loan on mortgage—Receiver can validly bind shares of parties by ex cution of mortgage—Mortgagee from Receiver held not entitled to first charge.

The title to properties does not vest in the Receiver, appointed under O. XL, Civil P. C., for the management and preservation of the properties in suit. The parties therefore have power to deal with their shares without reference to Court provided that their acts do not interfere with possession of the Receiver. The Receiver can exercise the powers of the owners in the matter of execution of documents and if the Court sanctions a loan on mortgage he can validly execute the mortgage instrument so as to bind the shares of the parties.

In those cases where the order of the Court simply sanctions a loan by the Receiver on a first charge of the properties, but does not indicate the purpose for which the loan is sanctioned, the creditor who advances the money is entitled to assume that everything was in order and so he ought to get what the Court had promised to give him, namely precedence over earlier encumbrances created by the parties. In such cases the Court cannot break faith with him. He is not bound to look beyond the order.

If the purpose of the loan as set out in the order is for preservation or protection of the property committed to the care of the Receiver, or is an order in an administration suit or one in a partition suit made for working out the rights, liabilities and obligations of the co-sharers of the joint properties in the course of partition, the mortgagee from the Receiver would have first charge in accordance with the order.

The power of the Court to sanction a loan for protection or preservation of the property is incidental to and necessary for the performance of its duty to protect and preserve the subject-matter of the suit, which it has taken upon itself by appointing a Receiver, and must be measured and limited by its duty, where its exercise comes into conflict with the rights of third parties which are not before it and to whom no notice had been given, or who had not consented. In such a case the principle of breach of faith cannot, be the decisive factor. It is a question of power or jurisdiction of the Court. If the Court arrogates to itself a power which it does not possess—and such usurpation appears on the face of the order—and does an act affecting persons not parties to the suit, its acts cannot prejudice the rights of such persons. In such a case the mortgagee from the Receiver cannot protect himself on the presumption that the Court had acted within its powers, for the order on the basis of which he acted ex facie would indicate want of power in the Court.

In a suit for partition the Court sanctioned a loan to be raised by the Receiver on a mortgage, for payment to one of the parties. The order originally did not mention the purpose of the loan nor made it a first charge. The Receiver who was personally interested in raising the loan on the basis of the order raised an amount in excess of that sanctioned by the Court on the basis of promissory notes and on the assurance to the creditor that the loan would be a first charge on the property. The parties subsequently agreed that their property should be mortgaged for the loan and by suppressing the fact that it was already heavily encumbered misled the Court into making the mortgage by Receiver a first charge on the property. No notices were issued to the prior mortgagees. On the basis of the second order the Receiver mortgaged the aforesaid property to the creditor already mentioned on two mortgages for amounts far in excess of that sanctioned by the Court.

Held, that no priority could be claimed by the mort-

The proper course and indeed the only course, for a party desiring to have a consent decree amended or cured, is to proceed by a separate suit for the purpose. It is not competent under O. XLVII to obtain

Sch. II, para. 1—Suit for restitution of conjugal rights, if can be referred to arbitration.

The question whether a person should be given a decree for restitution of conjugal rights against his wife is a matter in difference between the husband and wife in suits for restitution of conjugal rights and there is no legal bar in Sch. II, Civil P. C., to its being referred to arbitration. Hence, there is nothing to prevent a reference of the whole suit for restitution of conjugal rights to arbitration and to a decree being

Sch. II, Paras. 21, 61, s. 104—Decree in accordance with award—Appeal, grounds of—Second appeal from order filing or refusing to file award, competency of.

Although a decree upon an award which is in accordance with the award is normally not appealable nevertheless an appeal will lie from such a decree where the submission or reference to arbitration is challenged as being invalid. From this, however, it does not follow that a second appeal will lie from an order filing or refusing to file an award when the validity of the reference to arbitration is challenged. An order filing or refusing to file an award not being a decree is appealable only to the extent allowed by s. 104, Civil P. C. which prohibits a second appeal.

A contractor contracted to build a building of a particular kind in a particular way and according to plans. The building owner appointed a supervising engineer. There was a collusion between the contractor and the engineer. When the building was nearly complete it proved to be so defective and out of level as to make it necessary to pull it down:

The claim under the subsequent mortgage is neither a set-off nor a counter-claim on which court-fees should be paid. Where the puisne mortgagees ask for this relief in their written statement it does not require to be stamped at all. It is no doubt advantageous to puisne mortgagees to obtain a decree on their mortgages without paying any court-fees and it would be especially so where the later mortgages happens to be for very large sums. The Legislature no doubt could have provided for payment of court fees by the puisne mortgagees when they claimed a determination, or recourse perhaps might have been had to s. 9, of the Suits Valuation Act. Section 7 (iv) (b) applies to cases relating to joint family property, where the plaintiff has been ousted from its enjoyment and seeks to be restored to joint enjoyment. II, Art. 17 (iii).

G's grandson instituted a suit against G's widow for a declaration to the effect that he was the adopted son of G under the will. A who was G's collateral was not made a party to that suit. The suit was decreed. Thereupon A instituted a suit for a declaration to the effect that the aforesaid decree in the suit instituted by G's grandson against G's widow had been obtained by fraud on wrong facts and against law, without joining the plaintiff (A) as a party, and that it was not binding on him, in other words, that G's grandson was not the adopted son of G and that the will set by him, on which the decree was obtained, was not genuine.

II, Art. 17 (iii).*

A suit was brought for the following reliefs. (1) A declaration that an order of the Revenue Officer fixing a reduced rent roll under s. 112 of the Bihar Ten. Act, was wrong, illegal, without jurisdiction, unenforceable, and not binding on the plaintiffs. (2) For enhancement of the reduced rent to the rent formerly paid :

Held, that the suit was not one under s. 104-H, Bihar Ten. Act. The declaration sought was necessary in view of s. 15 of the Bihar Restoration of Bakasht Lands and Reduction of Arrears of Rent Act. The only relief however, which the plaintiff could ask the Court to grant, was a declaration that the proceedings were illegal and without effect. The Court could not be asked, to cancel the proceedings of the Revenue Officer. Once that declaration was given, there could be no need for any additional relief in the shape of restoration of the old rates of rent, or an enhancement of the rent to the old rates. Once it was declared that the alteration in the rates was illegal and of no effect, the old rates of rent would be restored automatically. Therefore, the second prayer for restoration of the original rate of rent by enhancement, was in fact quite unnecessary, and should be disregarded as surplusage. The Court must in such cases go by the substance rather than the wording of the plaint and substantially the suit was for a declaration, pure and simple and there was clearly a court-fee payable for the declaration under Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii), Court Fees Act.

Held, further that the Civil Court was not sitting in appeal or revision from the orders of the Revenue Officer, and if those were voidable orders, it was not for the Civil Court to cancel them. RAI BAGESHWARI PRASAD v. TULSI GARAIN Pat. 378

The instruction in the Burma Courts Manual (Para. 102) which is based on the provisions of s. 17 (1), Criminal P. s. 103—Panchnama—Identification parade—Police relying on panchnama must call panch to prove it—Object of calling panch witness—Independent evidence that identification parade was properly and fairly held.

If the Police relied on a panchnama, they must call a panch to prove it, the practice of allowing a panchnama to be put in by a Police witness is wrong. The object of having panch witnesses is to provide evidence which is independent of the Police. In searches under Chap. VII, Criminal P. C., or the City of Bombay Police Act, it is necessary to call panchas, but s. 103 (2) of the Code provides that they need not be called as witnesses unless they are specially summoned. That does not mean that the panchnama can be used if no panch is called apart from searches, it is, of course, not a rule of law or practice that Police evidence must be corroborated; but in case of an identification parade, and where it is of vital consequence to show that the accused was duly identified, it is obviously desirable, to have some independent evidence that the parade was properly and fairly held. MOHANLAL BABABHAI v. EMPEROR Bom. 326

s. 103—Panchnama—Panchnama can be used only to refresh panch's memory—Police Officer cannot bring panchnama on record in his evidence-in-chief—Police holding panchnama but not offering to call panch—Adverse inference against them can be drawn.

The panchnama is merely a record of what a panch sees, and the only use to which it can properly be put is that when the panch goes into the witness-box and swears as to what he saw, the panchnama can be used as a contemporary record to refresh his memory. But a Police Officer is not entitled to give evidence of what the panch told him, that he saw, and that is what it comes to if a Police Officer is allowed to put in the panchnama. A Police witness may state that he held a panchnama and offer to produce the record if the accused asks for it, but he cannot bring it on record in his evidence-in-chief. If the Police hold a panchnama, and do not offer to call the panch, an inference may be drawn against them from the fact that the panch is not submitted for cross-examination. The putting in of a panchnama without calling the panch is not only an infringement of the rules of evidence against the admission of hearsay evidence, but it is unfair to the accused, because it enables the Police to get the advantage of evidence in corroboration without

C. is applicable to a person who, being or coming within the local limits of the jurisdiction of a certain Magistrate, takes precautions to conceal his presence with a view to committing an offence. It is not limited to the more restricted case of a person who, with a similar object, takes precautions to conceal the fact of his presence within the local limits of the jurisdiction of a certain Magistrate. If a man is taking precautions anywhere in order to conceal his presence, and that concealing is to be effected within the jurisdiction of a Magistrate who receives information such Magistrate has power to demand security, even though the residence of the person informed against within the jurisdiction is well-known. CHHUTAI (CHITAI) v. s. 109 (a) (b)—S. 109 (a) applicability of—Held on facts that s. 109 (a) did not apply.

The cl. (a) of s. 109, Criminal P. C., should be applied with proper discretion: It cannot be applied to a person who was merely found talking at night, time with bad characters in a place open to the public or to one who merely shows a disinclination for the society of the Police and endeavours to avoid them by running away on their approach. There must be some definite attempt at concealment by taking precautions with that object in view, whether it be by disguise or otherwise, indicating a desire to hide the fact that the person is present within the local limits of the Magistrate jurisdiction.

Held, having regard to the entire circumstances that it was a matter of common experience that a person in the position of a petitioner would ordinarily try to run away when challenged at night from the Police or the choukidars, and that there was no sufficient evidence which would justify the inference that the petitioner had been found to be taking precautions to hide his presence far less that he was taking such precautions in order to commit an offence. LAKHMAN KURMI v. s. 147—Dispute relating to right exercisable only at particular seasons—Magistrate starting proceeding under s. 147 cannot drop it when season is over and cannot pass order which could not be properly passed after hearing all evidence.

When the dispute relates to a right exercisable only at particular seasons, it cannot be the law that it is open to the Magistrate to start a proceeding under s. 147 not only to drop it when the season is over but in addition to pass an order against one of the parties which could only be properly passed after hearing all the evidence that the parties may desire to produce in the case. Where a Magistrate is satisfied that a dispute requiring to be dealt with under the ss. 144, 145 and 147 does exist, it is clearly necessary that he should proceed with the matter in accordance with the law, and the High Court cannot permit him to abuse the procedure by dropping the proceedings on an untenable ground and indirectly passing an order which he could not directly have passed without hearing all the evidence. DWARKA SINGH v. JAMUNA SINGH Pat. 793.

— ss. 155, 173—Charge-sheet, when can be called—Final report of Police that case was non-cognizable accepted by Sub-Divisional Officer—Subsequently Court Sub-Inspector moving Magistrate on Inspector's report and copy of Government letter addressed to Deputy Inspector-General of Police that cases should be tried and decided in Court—Magistrate calling for charge-sheet—There was held no proper material to put accused on trial—Magistrate held did not act judicially and order must be quashed in revision.

A complaint was made to the Magistrate about a cognizable offence. The investigating officer submitted a final report that the case was non-cognizable which was accepted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The Magistrate was subsequently moved by the Court Sub-Inspector on a letter or report of the Inspector of Police. And a copy of a letter from the Chief Secretary to Govt. in which it was stated that Govt. were of opinion that the counter cases should be tried and the issue decided in the Court. This letter was addressed to the Deputy Inspector-General of Police, C. I. D., and was sent to the Inspector in the usual course for information and compliance. The Inspector wrote that in face of the Govt. orders charge-sheets will have to be submitted in both the cases and he enquired if it would be regular for the Police to submit the charge-sheets suo motu or whether in order "to regularize judicial proceedings" the Sub-Divisional Officer should call for charge-sheets. Upon this the Magistrate's order was "Inspector's report and copy of Govt. orders seen. Call for a charge-sheet." On the subsequent date the Magistrate noted that the charge-sheet had been received, and transferred the case to another Magistrate for disposal, adding, "you will please have the original record called for"; the accused and the witnesses were thereafter summoned in accordance with the charge-sheet;

Held, (i) that the Magistrate was competent under the law to reconsider the order accepting the final report of the Police but he could only do so on proper materials;

(ii) that the application in revision against the order of the Magistrate calling for the charge-sheet was one to revise the judicial order of the Magistrate and not the orders of the Govt.;

(iii) that neither the Inspector's report nor the copy of the Govt. orders on which materials the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate calling for a charge-sheet was founded, contained any relevant materials which could form the basis of that order whether by way of judicial action or as an obvious preliminary to judicial action. The Magistrate did not consider whether there were any proper materials for his putting the accused on their trial. It was clearly his duty as a judicial officer to form his own views on proper materials instead of merely carrying out the views of Govt. in his judicial work as a Magistrate. The Magistrate did not apply his judicial mind before putting the accused on his trial. As he took the judicial action upon what he took to be Govt. orders and not upon proper materials, the proceedings must be quashed. N. L. CARRICK v. EMPEROR Pat. 94.

— ss. 155, 173, 435, 439—Cases disposed of by Sub-Divisional Officer as non-cognizable—No further investigation without order of competent Magistrate and no charge-sheet—Magistrate taking cognizance of case and transferring it to another

Magistrate for trial—His act, whether judicial—If open to revision.

Where the cases are disposed of by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate as non-cognizable there can be no further investigation under Chap. XIV of the Criminal P. C., without the order of a competent Magistrate according to s. 155 (2)—and no charge-sheet under s. 173.

Section 192 (1), Criminal P. C., empowers a Sub-Divisional Magistrate to transfer any case of which he has taken cognizance, for enquiry or trial, to any Magistrate subordinate to him. The order of transfer to another Magistrate, therefore, necessarily imports his taking cognizance of the case, and it constitutes a judicial act. Hence, the Magistrate's action in taking cognizance and transferring the case to another Magistrate for trial is a judicial matter open to scrutiny by Courts of Revision under ss. 435 and 439, Criminal P. C. N. L. CARRICK v. EMPEROR Pat. 94.

The Magistrate to whom a case is transferred under s. 192, Criminal P. C., must be empowered to try it, otherwise the trial would be void under the provisions of s. 530 of the Code. HAFIZAR RAHMAN v. AMINAL HAQUE Cal. 38

When a case has been transferred to a Magistrate under s. 192 (1), Criminal P. C., that Magistrate has the same authority to deal with the case which has been transferred to him, as regards the issuing of processes and other matters connected with the inquiry or trial, as is vested in the superior Magistrate from whom he received the case on transfer. When once a case has been validly transferred to a subordinate Magistrate under s. 192 (1) of the Code, such Magistrate has no authority to return the case to the transferring Magistrate in order that the latter might issue process under s. 201 and his duty is to complete the trial according to law. The superior Magistrate has no jurisdiction to issue any orders connected with the case except such as are contemplated under the provisions of s. 528 or Chap. XXXII of the Code. *HAFIZAR RAHMAN v. The legality of the piecemeal transfer of a case under s. 192 (1), Criminal P. C., is doubtful. Even if such piecemeal transfer is in certain circumstances valid that portion of the case which has not been transferred must be clearly indicated in the order of transfer recorded by the transferring Magistrate who acts under s. 192, (Criminal P. O.). In the absence of a clear indication as to which part of the case is retained on the file of the transferring Magistrate or some further indication to the effect that such Magistrate intended to dismiss the complaint against those accused persons in respect of whom he did not issue process, it must be taken that the whole case had been transferred to the subordinate Magistrate not only as against the accused persons actually summoned but against all other persons whom the subordinate Magistrate might consider to be implicated in the offence. HAFIZAR RAHMAN v. AMINAL HAQUE Cal. 38

s. 192 (1)—S. 192 (1) is wider than s. 190 (1) — Scope of s. 192 (1)—Matter in respect of which trial or enquiry may be held under Code—Magistrate, if can take cognizance—Magistrate when competent to transfer under s. 192 (1).

Section 192 (1) refers not merely to take cognizance of offences but to cases of which cognizance has been taken and the language used is wider in its character than that which has been employed in s. 190 (1). Therefore, cognizance can be taken by a Magistrate of any matter in respect of which an enquiry or trial may be held under the provisions of the Criminal P. O., and in taking cognizance of an offence or other cases, for example, cases under ss. 107, 110 or 145 of the Code, a Magistrate merely takes seisin of the matter for the purpose of exercising the specific powers with which he has been vested under the Code in connection with the case in question. As soon as a Magistrate duly empowered has taken cognizance of a matter, there is a case before him which he is competent to transfer to a subordinate Magistrate under the provisions of s. 192 (1) of the Code. Although s. 192 appears in Part VI of the Code relating to proceedings in prosecutions, nevertheless it is sufficiently wide to cover cases under the Code other than criminal cases.

Consequently the Magistrates mentioned in s. 192 (1) have power to transfer cases to subordinate Magistrates either for the purpose of holding a trial for example under Chaps. XX or XXI of the Code or for enquiry, for example under Chaps. VIII, XII or XVII of the Code. HAFIZAR RAHMAN v. AMINAL HAQUE Cal. 38 ss. 192 (1), 202—Inquiry under s. 192 (1), nature of—Inquiry under s. 202, nature and scope of—Magistrate ordering enquiry under s. 202, whether transfers case.

The term "inquiry" in s. 192 (1) is used with special reference to such inquiries as are held in connection with proceedings under Chaps. VIII, XII and XVIII of the Code. The inquiry which is contemplated by s. 202, on the other hand, is merely for the limited purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of a complaint in order to enable the Magistrate to decide whether an accused person should be summoned or the complaint against him should be dismissed under s. 203. The plain meaning of s. 192 (1) of the Code is that a case which is transferred to a subordinate Magistrate under that section is transferred to him in order that he may complete the inquiry or trial to be held in connection with the case and take all requisite steps to that end. The holding of an inquiry under s. 202 in a suitable case is merely one of such requisite steps to be taken by a Magistrate who has taken cognizance of a case or to whom a case may have been transferred for trial under s. 192 (1). It is clear that, a Magistrate who orders an inquiry under s. 202 of the Code does not transfer the case at all. Ordinarily he merely retains the case on his own file and directs some suitable person to hold an inquiry and send the report to him. It follows, therefore, that an order for an inquiry under s. 202 of the Code cannot operate as a transfer under s. 192 (1). HAFIZAR RAHMAN v. AMINAL HAQUE Cal. 38 ss. 192 (1), 202, 204—Transfer under s. 192 (1), as soon as accused appears or at any time thereafter when case is ready for inquiry or trial.

If ss. 192 (1), 202 and 204 are read together, it is clearly competent for the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to transfer the case as soon as the accused has appeared or at any time thereafter when the case becomes ready for the inquiry or the trial. It would be equally competent for the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to transfer the case to a subordinate Magistrate immediately after the complainant had been examined. HAFIZAR RAHMAN v. AMINAL HAQUE Cal. 38 ss. 192 (1), 204—Magistrate summoning only one accused—Transfer of case under s. 192 (1)—Death of aforesaid accused subsequently—Proceedings in case against others, if terminated.

Where a Magistrate summons only one of the accused persons mentioned in the complaint and transfers the case under s. 192 (1), the death of the aforesaid accused subsequent to the transfer does not terminate the proceedings in the case against the other accused persons unless the Magistrate to whom the case is transferred thinks fit to conclude the proceedings against him. HAFIZAR RAHMAN v. AMINAL HAQUE Cal. 38 ss. 204, 202—Opinion of Magistrate that there is sufficient ground for issuing process under s. 204, whether should be based on evidence—Record of reason.

It is not necessary that the opinion that there is sufficient ground for issuing process against certain accused persons under s. 204 should be based on evidence in the case nor that the reasons for such an opinion should be recorded. When the sworn statements, the reports of the enquiring officers under s. 202 of the Code and the petitions of complaint are before the Magistrate it must be presumed that he had perused these documents and the other papers on the record and that, after having done so, he was of opinion that there was sufficient ground for proceeding against some of the accused persons other than those in respect of whom process had originally been issued. HAFIZAR RAHMAN v. AMINAL HAQUE Cal. 38

s. 209—Duty of committing Magistrate—His power to weigh evidence and exercise judicial discretion—Weighing evidence and balancing it, difference—Trial of number of accused—Prosecution evidence identical against all—Evidence not believed against some—Either all must be discharged or all committed—Held that all accused ought to have been committed.

The law clearly empowers the committing Magistrate to weigh the evidence, and to exercise his judicial discretion, and it plainly contemplates that he should do so. Nevertheless, it is one thing to weigh the evidence with a view to determining whether there are or are not sufficient grounds for commitment within the meaning of s. 203, (Criminal P. O.), and another to balance the evidence, as it is the duty of the Sessions Court to do, in order to decide upon the guilt of the accused after considering the case as a whole. It is not for the Magistrate to usurp the functions of the Sessions Court. It is not for him to decide whether upon the whole this witness or that witness should or should not be believed. In short, though the Magistrate should weigh the evidence and exercise his judicial discretion, the criterion to be applied by him is not quite the same criterion as will be finally applied by the Sessions Court at the trial. If the Magistrate, after weighing the evidence, is satisfied that it is evidence upon which no reasonable Court could convict, it is his duty to discharge; but if it is a case of balancing probabilities, estimating pros and cons; if it is a case where a different Court might possibly, in his opinion, come to a conclusion different from his own, then it is his duty to commit where the evidence is sufficient for conviction, if believed, and that even though, he may himself not think the evidence sufficient for a conviction. In such circumstances he should leave it to the Sessions Court to estimate the result of the evidence as a whole after cross-examination and a full trial. These considerations are all the more applicable in a case where there are a number of accused persons, and the evidence led by the prosecution is practically identical against them all. Undoubtedly it is open to any of the accused to satisfy the Magistrate that that evidence is not at all fit to be believed; but if they do, the result should be the discharge of all the accused, and not commitment of some and discharge of others.

A number of accused were produced before the committing Magistrate. The prosecution evidence was the same in case of all the accused. Two of the accused examined defence witnesses to establish an alibi. The Magistrate discharged these two accused and committed the rest. He did not in his order state definitely that he disbelieved the evidence of the prosecution witnesses, but held that in the case of these two accused persons the alibi had been established:

Held, that, in the circumstances the real alternatives were either to commit or to discharge all. Even without an express finding on the Magistrate's part that the prosecution witnesses were speaking falsely the course he adopted must, be liable to prejudice the trial of the persons he actually committed. It would have been better in such circumstances to leave the evidence as a whole with all its pros and cons to be weighed by the Court of Session. The case was one where all the accused should have been committed to stand their trial. MOINUDDIN v. SHEGOBIND SAHU Pat. 399

s. 234—Criminal cases, when can be consolidated and tried together on same evidence.

Criminal cases cannot like civil suits be consolidated and tried together on the same evidence except within the limits as to the joinder of charges laid down in the Criminal P. C. Hence, where there are a series of complaints of an offence alleged to have been committed on different occasions it is not permissible to the Magistrate to hear the evidence and write a judgment in one of the cases and then proceed to pass merely consequential orders in other cases.

Under s. 159, Bom. Municipal Boroughs Act, it has got to be proved, firstly, that the accused is a person who has the building or land under his control, secondly, that he allowed the water to run upon any street, land or space, and, thirdly, that the water was or was likely to become offensive. Waste water of the bleaching and dyeing departments of a mill would not necessarily be offensive or likely to become offensive in the absence of any proof. EMPEROR v. ss. 258, 367—Order of acquittal should be incorporated in judgment.

It is imperative that if in any case in which a charge has been framed the Magistrate finds the accused not guilty, he shall record an order of acquittal. The provisions of s. 258 (1), Criminal P. C., are mandatory. Mere mention of the fact of acquittal in an order-sheet is not enough. The order-sheet is no substitute for the judgment. DIWAN v. RAJA RAM Oudh 372

s. 289—Trial by jury—Function of jury—Duty of Judge in leaving case to jury—Prosecution case closed—Conclusion of Judge that jury will not be justified in convicting even, if they believed all prosecution evidence—Judge is bound to say so and direct jury that in law they must give verdict of not guilty—He must not in such case leave matter to jury.

In a trial by jury if the Judge comes to the conclusion that there is no evidence to go to the jury, it is the duty of the Judge to direct the jury that in law they must acquit. It is the function of the jury, to determine whether the evidence is true, and if the Judge thinks that the prosecution evidence, if true, will lead to a conviction, then he is bound to leave the case to the jury. But if he thinks that though weak the evidence if true will justify a conviction, he must leave the case to the jury, cautioning them, of course, about the weak points in the evidence. But if the Judge, after the prosecution case is closed, comes to the conclusion that, assuming that the jury believe every word of the prosecution evidence, nevertheless they will not be justified in convicting, then he is bound in law to say so and to direct the jury that in law they must bring in a verdict of not guilty, and he ought not in such a case to leave the matter to the jury. EMPEROR v. s. 386 (1) (b) and (3)—S. 386, whether controls s. 70, Penal Code—Effect of s. 386 (3).

Section 70, I. P. C., is substantive law as to the payment of fine while s. 386, Criminal P. C., relates to the procedure of its recovery. Section 70, I. P. C., is not therefore controlled by the provisions of s. 386, sub-ss. (1) (b) and (3), Criminal P. C. The warrant issued under s. 336 (1) (b), Criminal P. C., is to be deemed to be a decree for certain purposes only and not for all purposes. For the purpose of limitation therefore the substantive law contained in s. 70 is not affected. The only effect of s. 386 (3), Criminal P. C., is that the warrant which is to be deemed to be a decree is to be executed according to the mode laid down in the civil procedure code. Section 48, Civil P. C., does not prescribe any period of limitation for taking out execution. Section 48, Civil P. C., does not therefore apply to the warrant under s. 336 (3), Criminal P. C. COLLECTOR OF BROACH & PANOCH MAHALS v. OCHHAVAL BHIKALAL Bom. 217

Under s. 435, Criminal P. s. 437—Scope and object—Essential point to be considered before acting under s. 437—Case before Magistrate in middle of hearing—Order directing commitment is not justified.

Section 437, Criminal P. C., contemplates a case in which there has already been a completed inquiry under the provisions of Chap. XVIII followed by an order of discharge in a case triable exclusively by the Court of Session. The object of s. 437 is to enable the Sessions Judge in such a case to order commitment for trial without the necessity of a fresh and unnecessary inquiry. Such a procedure as is contemplated by s. 437 may be either in a proceeding under Chap. XVIII or in a case in which the accused has been tried out and convicted or acquitted on other charges by a warrant case. Such discharge may be either express or by implication. The essential point either for a Magistrate acting under s. 347 or for a Sessions Judge acting under s. 437 is to make certain that the rights of the accused are in no way prejudiced.

In a case where the Magistrate has only framed charges in respect of certain offences and fixed a date for further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and thus the case is still in the middle of its hearing an order under s. 437, Criminal P. C., directing commitment is not justified and must be set aside. NASIMULLAH v. EMPEROR Oudh 214

The superintendence given to the High Court under sub-s. (1) of s. 224 of the Govt. of India Act, 1935, is not to be construed as giving to a High Court any jurisdiction to question any judgment of any inferior Court which is not otherwise subject to appeal or revision.

Section 439 of the Criminal P. C., will not enable the High Court to expunge passages from a judgment which is not under appeal. So also, all that s. 561-A, Criminal P. —s. 476—Decision of lower Courts under ss. 476 and 476-B, if can be interfered with by High Court under Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115.

The sum and substance of s. 476 is that before a prosecution can be launched either the first or the Appellate Court must be of opinion both that an offence appears to have been committed and that it is expedient to prosecute. If in their opinion either of these elements is absent, then no prosecution can be launched. It is consequently not necessary for these two Courts to deal with both questions when in their opinion the answer to either is in the negative; also they can consider the questions in any order they please, but the opinion has to be their opinion and not the opinion of the High Court in revision. Also, if they take up those questions or either of them and deal with them judicially and reach a conclusion then the High Court has no jurisdiction whatever to interfere in revision under s. 115 of the Civil P. C., however, wrong or erroneous the High Court may consider that conclusion to be. RAMBILAS HARSUKHDAS v. JAI KISAN Nag. 583

EMPEROR Pat. 295*

Evidence—Appreciation—Practice of awarding reward to Police witnesses before case is finally decided deprecated—Its effect stated.

Action of the Police authorities of rewarding Police witnesses before the case is finally determined is calculated to prejudicially affect the fair trial of the case against the accused. Such action may lead to a large body of otherwise good evidence being eliminated altogether from consideration.

[Their Lordships treated the evidence of such witnesses as suspicious and tainted]. KING-EMPEROR v. GAYA PRASAD Oudh 557

Evidence—Appreciation of evidence—Prosecution evidence should be considered on merits and not rejected on consideration of defence evidence.

While dealing with the evidence of each prosecution witness the Judge should not unnecessarily introduce the defence evidence and reject the prosecution evidence largely because in his opinion the defence evidence established the innocence of the accused. The Judge should examine the prosecution evidence witness by witness on its own merits and reject it, if upon a careful analysis and scrutiny of the evidence he finds that it was not true or reliable to support the prosecution case. He should not test trustworthiness of the prosecution witnesses in the light of the defence evidence. KING-EMPEROR v. GAYA PRASAD Oudh 557

Evidence—Medical witness giving evidence—relying on text-books—Value of.

Where a medical witness gives evidence relying largely on statements in text-books as to the time of the death from the appearance of blisters on the dead body, the theoretical evidence of this description is not of value unless it is exhaustive with regard to all possible circumstances. KATTAMEEDI CHENNA REDDI, In re Mad. 527

Evidence—Murder—Deliberate opinion of doctor conducting autopsy that nature and number of wounds indicated that either there was deep motive for murder or murderer must have been insane—Admissibility.

Per Patanjali Sastri, J.—The deliberate opinion of a doctor who conducted the autopsy, that from the nature and number of the injuries on the body of the deceased which he had examined, there must have been either some deep seated motive for the murder or the offender must have been insane, is admissible in evidence. SANKAPPA SHETTY, In re Mad. 332

Evidence—Prosecution witness not cross-examined by accused before committing Court—Statement by him of incident indicating accused's insanity in Sessions Court—His omission to state in committing Court does not affect his veracity.

Where a prosecution witness who has not been cross-examined by the accused in the committing Magistrate's Court states an incident indicating the accused's insanity in the Sessions Court for the first time, no adverse inference against the veracity of the witness can be drawn from his omission to refer to the incident in committing Magistrate's Court though he might have voluntarily placed the information before the Magistrate. SANKAPPA SHETTY, In re Mad. 352

First information report—Person not named in—Action against, if can be taken.

An action need not be confined to persons named in the first information or charged with taking a direct part in an occurrence. N. L. CARRICK v. EMPEROR Pat. 94

First information report—Report of Police Sub-Inspector to his superior that certain persons were going to commit dacoity—Source of information not disclosed—Whether can be treated as first information.

The report made by the Police Sub-Inspector to his superiors that certain suspected persons were going to commit dacoity cannot be used as a sort of first information, if the Sub-Inspector has not in his report disclosed the source of his information, and the mere fact that he says that somebody told him that certain persons were going to commit a dacoity is no evidence at all against those persons. If the Sub-Inspector of Police wanted to prove as against the accused the information which he had received, he would be bound to give evidence as to the source of his information, and to call his informant. BIRAM SINGH SARDAR v. EMPEROR Bom. 122

Identification—Value of.

It is not illogical to say that the evidence of identification by itself might be unreliable but that, when substantial evidence is added to it, the identification evidence assumes a totally different aspect. When therefore a man is identified as being one of three persons engaged in a murder and when that person states that a jewel produced by him from a hiding place came to his share, it is reasonable to hold that he was concerned in the murder in the absence of any explanation. KATTAMEEDI CHENNA REDDI, In re Mad. 527

Jurisdiction—Magistrate cannot try Sessions case by leaving out more serious charges and confining charges to minor ones—Magistrate held could not try case by framing charge under ss. 147, and 325 read with s. 149, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860).

Where a number of accused persons participate in rioting in the course of which grievous hurt and death are caused to some persons, it is not open to the Magistrate to bring the case within his jurisdiction by charging the accused with offences under ss. 147 and 325 read with s. 149, I. P. C. The fact that the accused charged with causing death is absconding is no ground for not framing charges against the accused under s. 302, I. P. C., or at least s. 304 read with s. 149. A case exclusively triable by a Court of Session cannot be brought within the jurisdiction of a Magistrate by leaving out the more serious charges and Revision—Error of law resulting in sentence of six months—Interference.

Where there has been a clear error in law resulting in a sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment upon the applicant, the High Court should interfere in revision. BHAIRO MURID JAGIRANI v. EMPEROR Sind 759

Sentence—Murder—Youth by itself, if reason for not passing death sentence.

Youth by itself is not a reason why the Court should evade its duty of sentencing the accused to death especially in the case of a cruel murderer. KATTAMEEDI CHENNA REDDI, In re Mad. 527

Sentence—Revision—Altering finding but maintaining sentence—Powers of Court.

A Court of Revision has the power of the Court of Appeal to "alter the finding maintaining the sentences or with or without altering the finding, reduce the sentence", and, therefore, to pass sentences under ss. 143 and 144 in a case, while setting aside the convictions under ss. 295 and 379, provided the sentences do not exceed those passed by the lower Appellate Court. BECHAN JHA v. EMPEROR Pat. 476

Trial by jury—Charge—Evidence against each accused should be summarized.

The Judge should conclude his charge with a summary of the evidence against each accused, so that the jury should be quite clear in their minds what evidence there was against each of them, though there is no fixed rule that a Judge should summarise separately the evidence against each accused:

Held, however, on facts that such a slight misdirection, did not prejudice the accused, specially when he himself had confessed about having committed the theft and the stolen goods were in consequence recovered from him. SUBBARAYA AYYAR v. EMPEROR Mad. 857

Trial by jury—Unanimous opinion of Judge and assessors as to credibility of witness—High Court is reluctant to differ.

Custom—Proof of—Wajib-ul-arz—Wajib-ul-araiz furnishing clear and definite evidence of certain custom—Discrepancies on other points of custom—If can be rejected.

Where a wajib-ul-araiz furnish clear and definite evidence of a particular custom, they cannot be rejected as unreliable because they are discrepant on other points of custom as the differences in the record of these customs must be attributed to the idiosyncracies of the recording officials. HARUN RASHID v. Custom (Punjab)—Non-ancestral property—Gift by widow with consent of next reversioner—Remoter collaterals, if can challenge it—Question of justification.

When the alienation of non-ancestral property by a widow is by way of gift with the consent of the next reversioner only, and is not made for charitable or religious purposes, no question of justification arises, so that the consent cannot be treated as intended for Custom (Punjab)—concl.

The consent of the next reversioner given in such circumstances should be regarded as intended to operate as a transfer by the reversioner following on a surrender by the widow. Consequently, the remoter collaterals of the widow's husband cannot contest the gift. SUNDAR v. TABO Lah. 310

Deed—Construction—Rule of Part, when to be rejected—Intention—Duty of Court.

Per Krishnaswamy Ayyangar, J.—In construction of a deed the question is obviously one of intention to be deduced or inferred from a consideration of the entire deed, bringing into action every part of it and rejecting none, unless the expressions are contradictory and incapable of being reconciled, or there is a repugnancy which calls for the rejection of one part in order to more effectually to carry into effect the real intention of the parties gatherable from the part retained. Rejection should be the last resort, after every means to reconcile are exhausted. The Court should rather lean towards a construction which would give a meaning and effect to every one of the clauses in a deed than towards one which would result in a nullification of anyone or more of them in the end. CHELIKANI KONDATTA RAO v. UPPALAPATI NAGANNA Mad. 470 F B

Construction—Value of case law.

In a matter turning on the construction of a document cases are not very helpful except to clear one's mind as to the essence of the transaction which the agreement is said to effect. DAU BHAIROPRASAD v. JUGALPRASAD Nag. 761

Construction—Zarepeshgi lease and usufructuary mortgage—Distinction—Transaction held lease and hypothecation clause did not change its character.

Both in the case of a zarepeshgi lease and in the case of a usufructuary mortgage the person in whose favour the document is executed is entitled to possession. Similarly, in both cases there is an advance of money to the executants of the deed. But in the case of a usufructuary mortgage, there is a statutory liability for accounting cast upon the mortgagee by s. 76 (g), T. P. Act. In the case of a zarepeshgi lease however normally there is no such liability on the lessee. Further, in the case of a zarepeshgi lease pure and simple the lessee is not given any security for the amount advanced by him. Whereas in the case of a usufructuary mortgage there is a transfer of interest in the property mortgaged in favour of the mortgagee. It is clear from the provisions of s. 105, T. P. Act, that in the case of a lease there is a mere transfer of a right to enjoy the property leased, and no interest in the same is transferred in favour of the lessee. Again, in the case of a lease there is no right of redemption vested in the lessor, whereas such a right exists in the case of a mortgage:

Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), s. 10-A—Privilege of agriculturist is personal—Mere initiation into ways of husbandry is not enough.

The privilege of an agriculturist is not hereditary but personal. Nor can that privilege be acquired by birth.

In order to claim the status of an agriculturist a person must prove that he is ordinarily engaged personally in agricultural labour, that is, he is regularly and habitually cultivating his fields. Mere initiation into the ways of husbandry is not enough. GANGADHAR KASHINATH SAKHARE v. DATTATRAYA VISHAVANATH SULAKHE Bom. 602

s. 10-A—Suit for redemption—Plaintiff must show that he is agriculturist and not merely that his predecessor was agriculturist at time of transaction.

In a suit for redemption, in order to rely on s. 10-A, Dekkhan Agri. Relief Act, the plaintiff must show that he was an agriculturist and not merely that his predecessor was an agriculturist at the date of the transaction.

The proper time when the jurisdiction to inquire into the real nature of the transaction can be assumed by the Court for the purpose of s. 10-A is when the Court is requested to exercise that jurisdiction. That request is contained in the plaint when disclosing the essential cause of action, upon the averment that the plaintiff is an agriculturist and a party to the suit. Therefore, if the plaintiff invokes the Court's jurisdiction under s. 10-A, he must be an agriculturist within the meaning of s. 2, Dekkhan Agri. Relief Act, at the date when the plaint is instituted. GANGADHAR KASHINATH SAKHARE v. DATTATRAYA VISHAVANATH SULAKHE Bom. 602

Dissolution of Muslim Marriages Act (VIII of 1939), s. 2 (ii)—Failure to maintain wife, whether should be wilful—Cause of failure is immaterial for divorce.

There is nothing in the wording of cl. (ii) of s. 2, Dissolution of Muslim Marriages Act to suggest that the failure to maintain wife must be wilful. It is absolutely, immaterial whether the failure to maintain is due to poverty, failing health, loss of work or to any other cause whatsoever. Electricity Act (IX of 1910), ss. 2 (n), 37—

Definition of 'works' in s. 2 (n) not exhaustive—"Works," meaning of explained.

The definition of 'works' in s. 2 (n), Electricity Act, is not exhaustive. Nevertheless, a reference to other provisions in the Act indicates that when the expression "works" is used it usually means works connected with the supply of energy, and not lighting installations. *EMPEROR v. s. 37—Rules under—Electricity Rules 1937—Offence between March 27, 1937 and March 22, 1938—Neither r. 40-A of Rules of 1922, nor its corresponding r. 48 of the Rules of 1937, held applied—S. 24, General Clauses Act (X of 1897), held not applicable to Rules.

The Electricity Rules, 1937, were made applicable in supersession of the Electricity Rules 1922, on March 27, 1937. The Electricity Rules of 1937, came into force on March 22, 1938. The accused was charged under r. 40-A of the Electricity Rules, 1922, for an offence committed between March 27, 1937 and March 22, 1938.

Held, that neither r. 40-A of the Rules of 1922 nor its corresponding provision r. 48 of the Rules of 1937, applied to the offence.

Held, further that s. 24, General Clauses Act, could not be invoked to apply r. 40-A of Rules of 1922, to the offence as that section did not apply to rules framed under the Act. EMPEROR v. RAGHUNATH RAMACHANDRA KARLEKAR Bom. 554

The word "works" in the Bom. Govt. Notification (No. 640-27-II) issued on November 15, 1934, refers to installation works and not to works connected merely with the supply of energy and the words "their own works" in the same notification mean works carried out by the exempted bodies themselves or perhaps

It is not any and every expression of opinion in a judgment which gives rise to the estoppel, nor can the actual decision be carried further than the circumstances warrant. Although it is improbable that a man who has been stabbed and has been able to recognize his assailant would omit to name the actual assailant and instead give the name of some other person in his dying declaration yet in cases where the assailant has not been recognized the Court must not ignore the possible temptation that there may be if one has grounds for suspecting any person, to name that person as having been actually and positively identified. The danger of this kind of wrong identification has to be borne in mind in dealing with what are called dying declarations. There is no absolute rule that a dying declaration should not be acted on for the purpose of convicting an accused person even if uncorroborated, provided, that the Court is fully satisfied that it is true. But before so acting on it the Court will apply to it every test of its genuineness and good faith which it is possible in the circumstances of the case to apply. MOHAMMAD ARIF v. Execution—Ghatwali tenure—Judgment-debtor ghatwali of ghatwali governed by Bengal Regulation XXIX of 1814—Surplus profits are available for satisfaction of decree—What would be surplus profits is to be determined by Court executing decree—Consideration in determining surplus profits—Allowance to be paid to judgment-debtor for his maintenance and other expenses—Tenure under attachment of government for their dues—Receiver appointed—Commissioner fixing allowances to be paid to ghatwali—Government dues satisfied—Surplus profits under attachment by Civil Court—Allowances fixed by Commissioner are not binding on Civil Court.

Where the judgment-debtor is a ghatwali in the Santal Parganas whose ghatwali tenure is governed by Ben. Regulation XXIX of 1814 and is inalienable the surplus profits of such ghatwali tenure which may be left "after the payment of Govt. revenue, the wages of the chowkidars employed by the ghatwali and other like charges" are available for the satisfaction of decrees obtained against the ghatwali.

The question of what would be the surplus profits available to the decree-holders of the ghatwali must be determined by the Court executing the decree. Whatever is left to the ghatwali out of the income of his tenure "after the payment of Govt. revenue, the wages of the chowkidars employed by the ghatwali and other like charges" is his personal property and as such liable to be seized and appropriated by the decree-holder. The ghatwali's maintenance allowance and other personal expenses do not come within the expression "other like charges". The Court, however, executing the decree must make provision for the maintenance and other necessary expenses of the ghatwali judgment-debtor. His maintenance allowance cannot be regarded as salary to be fixed by the executive authorities. Where the surplus profits are under attachment by the Civil Court, it is that Court which has to determine the amount of surplus profits available to the decree-holder and for that purpose to fix the allowance to be paid to the judgment-debtor for his maintenance and other expenses. The Receiver in possession of the judgment-debtor's estate is under the control and supervision of the executing Court and must, therefore, prepare the budget with the sanction of that Court.

Foreign Judgment—Effect—Creditor's option to bring action in domestic tribunal on foreign judgment—Notification under s. 44, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), whether alters character of foreign judgment.

It is a well-established principle of Private International Law that a foreign judgment only creates a new obligation to pay but does not extinguish the original cause of action for the debt. A foreign judgment involves no merger of the original cause of action especially when it has been declared to be a nullity by a competent British Indian Court. The creditor thereunder has the option of bringing an action in a domestic tribunal on the foreign judgment which he has recovered or of bringing in a domestic tribunal a suit upon the original cause of action. It does not matter whether the procedure for enforcing a foreign judgment is by a suit or by an application in the form of execution. The mere fact that by reason of the notification issued by the Governor-General in Council under s. 44, Civil P. C., the plaintiff had the right to enforce the foreign judgment by an application for execution would not alter the legal character of the foreign judgment. In law it would still be regarded as only creating an independent obligation on the judgment-debtor to pay the sum adjudged without involving a merger of the original cause of action. NILRATAN MUKHOPADHYA v. COOCH BEHAR LOAN OFFICE LTD. Cal. 746

Where the first judgment pronounced against some of several joint promissors or contractors is a judgment not of a domestic Court but of a foreign Court, the original cause of action still subsists and a second suit based on it can still be filed in a domestic tribunal. The promisee who has the right to sue on the original cause of action both in the foreign Court and in the domestic Court may in such a case sue those promissors who are residents or subjects of the foreign State in the foreign Court and so get against them an effective judgment in that Court and may also sue

Government of India Act, 1935, (25 & 26

Geo. V, Ch. 42), s. 65—Government Trading Taxation Act (III of 1926), is intra vires the Government of India.

A tax on income accruing or arising or received in British India by a person resident outside British India is legislation relating to something, i. e., certain income, in British India, and therefore, it falls within the very wide and general words of s. 65, Govt. of India Act. Therefore the Govt. Trading Taxation Act of 1926 is intra vires the Govt. of India. In re PATIATA STATE BANK Bom. 712

s. 208 (b)—Leave to appeal to Privy Council—Grounds—General importance of cases—Decision dealing with decrees whose number is limited—No leave can be granted.

The Federal Court will not be disposed to grant leave to appeal to the Privy Council save in cases of real importance, cases which are likely to affect a large number of interest thereafter or cases in which difficult questions of law are involved. Where a decision deals with appeals whose number is limited and cannot be added to, no leave can be granted to appeal against it. A. L. S. P. P. L. SUBRAHMANYAM CHETTIAR v. s. 208 (b)—Leave to appeal to Privy Council—Grounds—Question must be of importance and really a substantial one—Question of interpretation of s. 292, Government of India Act as to whether it deprives Legislatures of power to legislate retrospectively, is not a substantial question.

When dealing with an application for leave to appeal to Privy Council the Federal Court must be satisfied that the matter is one of importance and that there is really a substantial question to be determined. On the question whether s. 292 of the Constitution Act can be interpreted as depriving Legislatures in India of the power to legislate with retrospective effect, there is no room for such serious doubt on the point as to justify Federal Court in holding that that is a substantial question on which leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council is to be granted.

Where it cannot be said that any decision so be obtained from their Lordships of the Privy Council, if the appeal should be permitted to go to them, is likely to have a material bearing upon future litigation there is no question of general public importance justifying the leave. ATIQA BEGAM v. The consent of the sapinda is necessary in the absence of direct authority from the husband. Where at the date of the mortgage executed by the father, the father is entitled to a half share in the joint family property that interest which is vested in him would pass to the mortgagee. The property which is effectively carried away from the family is only a half and the other half would still be the joint family property and it is only in that half and in the equity of redemption in the other half, the afterborn son would be entitled to participate with the other son. This is in strict consonance with the principles of Hindu Law that in a Mitakshara family a member acquires right by birth only in the property which was then in existence and not in the property which has been effectively carried away from the family. VASIREDDI BALACHANDRASEKHARA VARAPRASAD BAHADUR v. An individual member of a joint Hindu family can own separate property. The family can by agreement break off a piece of its property (whether tangible or a share) and hand it over to one of its members for him to have and to hold as his separate estate. They can do this just as effectually and completely as they could to a complete outsider, and yet remain joint. —Co-sharers—Adverse possession—Manager denying rights of co-owner—Possession of junior member, whether enures for benefit of co-owner in repelling plea of adverse possession—Possession of one co-sharer, when adverse.

Where after the partition a co-owner has chosen to mix his separate movable property with property held in co-ownership the burden lies heavily upon him to prove that the immovable properties acquired after the partition were acquired from his own separate funds and not out of the income of the property held by him in co-ownership.

Possession by one of the junior members of the joint family is the possession of the manager of the family and can give manager's co-owner no advantage when the manager or karta of the family denied, or in any case is not proved to have admitted that co-owner's rights.

Possession of a co-owner in law is the possession of his co-owners. It is not possible for him to put an end to that possession by any secret intention in his mind. Nothing short of ouster or something equivalent to ouster can bring about the result. It is not necessary to show that adverse possession was brought to the knowledge of the person against whom it was claimed. It is sufficient that the possession was adverse and without any attempt at concealment so that the person against whom time was running ought, if he exercised due vigilance, to have been aware of what was happening. Non-participation by one of two co-owners in the possession and enjoyment of the property belonging to them as co-owners for an extended period, coupled with the absence of any claim or demand for participation, may amount to ouster of such co-owner; whether it does or not, depends upon the facts and circumstances of each individual case. If in the circumstances of any particular case such non-participation and absence of demand cannot be interpreted by themselves as exclusion or ouster, it is necessary for the party claiming title by adverse possession to prove some further specific act or specific acts of ouster. Such ouster must in its nature be an open assertion of a hostile title, such that actual or constructive knowledge thereof is clearly attributable to the party intended and sought to be excluded. Adverse possession will then start from the date of such act or acts. KHEMOHAND DAYARAM v. DAYARAM JESSOMAL

—Business—Junior co-parcener participating in conduct of business—His personal liability—Whether extends to antecedent transaction.

part in the conduct of the family business is personally liable, and, if so, on what legal basis, is essentially one of fact depending for its decision upon the nature and extent of participation as disclosed by the evidence in the particular case. If what the junior member is shown to have done in relation to the business is nothing more than what can reasonably be attributed to his interest in the business as a member of the family, there will be no legitimate inference that he intended to undertake a greater liability as a partner in the business and consequently no question of personal liability can arise. On the other hand, if the part taken by such member in the management of the business goes beyond what can be sufficiently explained by the interest in it as an asset of the family, as for instance, when he joins in borrowing for the purpose of the business, it may afford ground for the conclusion that he has become a partner so as to be personally answerable for all the debts incurred in the course of the business including those which he did not join in borrowing. Without such definite and unequivocal consensual acts, no partnership relation between members of a joint family can be implied from participation, however, active, in the conduct of the family business, a position which has received additional emphasis from the provisions of s. 5, Partnership Act. But such liability does not extend, in either case, to antecedent transactions. L. M. L. V. ALAGAMAI ACHI v. M. PALANIAPPA CHETTIAR Mad. 514

In holding a junior member of a family personally liable for a contract purporting to have been entered into by the manager on the ground of ratification, it is important to bear in mind that the doctrine presupposes ability to adopt or repudiate the transaction in question and cannot properly be applied for this reason to dealings or transactions which under the Hindu Law the co-parceners are powerless to disown, so long as they continue to remain in the joint family, unless it can be shown that the manager pledged the individual credit of the junior co-parceners at the time when he received the deposits in question and that the junior co-parceners having come to know of the transaction accepted or acquiesced in it. *L. A wife can sue for her share where there has been a partition and she has not been assigned any share and has not assented or waived her rights or acquiesced.

Nobody in the family was aware that the wife was entitled to a share. No provision was made for her in the partition. She was never asked to waive her right to her share. She was allowed to retain and in fact she retained certain ornaments. Held, that the wife did not acquiesce in the partition and consequently was entitled to a share. The fact that she suggested a division of the ornaments and actually got them weighed for the purpose did not involve any agreement or consent with regard to partition.

Held, also that in settling the wife's share the value of the ornaments taken by her must be taken into account.

Widow—Maintenance—Decree for maintenance against undivided members made charge on family property—Subsequent partition does not affect decree—Subsequent partition with consent of widow—Suit by member for declaration that he is not liable under decree due to partition does not lie—Question falls under s. 47, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908).

When a member of an undivided family dies leaving him surviving his widow and his sons and brothers, the widow's right to maintenance is against the entire joint family composed of the sons and brothers of the husband. It may be that if she waits until a partition takes place she may have a lesser right, i. e., instead of a right over the entire family, a right over those persons who take her husband's share. But if before a partition is effected, she gets her right declared, defined and reduced to a certainty by a decree of Court, her rights cannot be taken away by any subsequent partition effected among the members of the family. When, therefore, the widow has secured her right fixing her claim against the whole joint family and getting a charge on a reasonable portion of the property the right or charge cannot be taken away from her by any subsequent partition between the members of the family.

Where subsequent to the passing of a maintenance decree creating a charge on certain joint family property, the members of the joint family effect a partition to which the widow is a consenting party a subsequent suit by one of the members for a declaration that he was not liable for the maintenance of the widow as the result of the partition with widow's consent is not maintainable as the question is one under s. 47 Civil P. C. AKKI DODDA BASAPPA v. AKKI NALLAMMA

Maintenance—Nature of widow's right to maintenance—Her separate property, if can be taken into account.

There is, it is true a distinction made in some of the text-books, between the productive and unproductive character of a widow's stridhanam property, but this does not seem to be based on any principle, if it is borne in mind that it is a right of the widow to be maintained out of her husband's estate or what was once her husband's estate, and it is the duty of those on whom her husband's estate has devolved to maintain the widow out of that property in the same degree of comfort to which she was used during husband's lifetime. It is immaterial if she had any private means of her own or could have them by selling some of the jewellery which would not be required by her, after her husband's death. Had the husband remained alive it would have been his duty to maintain his wife out of his own estate irrespective of her stridhanam or private means and there appears to be no reason why the latter should be regarded to be any factor in fixing the maintenance after his death. The right of maintenance was conferred on the widow under the Hindu Law in lieu of her husband's share in the joint family property and cannot be taken away by the fact that she has some property of her own either productive or non-productive of income. NALLAPAREDDI ANNAPOORNAMMA v. PELLETI VEERARAGHAVA REDDI Mad. 569

Widow—Maintenance—Suit for, against manager—Manager's duty to prove binding nature of debts sought to be taken into account for, reducing family income—Costs in such suit.

In a suit by a Hindu widow for maintenance against the manager of the joint family, the manager is under obligation to prove that the debts which according to him have to be taken into account in ascertaining family income are binding on the family in other words, the manager's ipse dixit is not sufficient to show for this purpose that the debts are binding on the family. It may be that the standard of proof so to say required for establishing the binding nature of the debts need not be so high as in a suit in which the dispute arises either as between the co-parceners in a suit for partition or as between the creditors and the other members of the family. But nevertheless there must be some prima facie reliable evidence to show that the debts are binding on the family when the manager of the family wants to have those debts to be taken into account for the purpose of reducing the family income available for calculating the rate of maintenance.

So long as the claim to maintenance is genuine and true and the amount claimed is not out of all proportion to the amount that is found to be due, the widow claiming maintenance ought not to be mulcted in costs, when she has established her right to maintenance, a right to which she is entitled and which was refused unreasonably and unlawfully by the defendants. NALLAPAREDDI ANNAPOORNAMMA v. Income-tax—Agricultural income—Sum collected by Receiver held not agricultural income—Amount held, constituted profit of mortgage transaction and, therefore, no deduction could be allowed in respect thereof.

In the year 1913, the assessee's father advanced Rs. 2,15,000 under a simple mortgage on the security of the zamindari. The loan was not repaid and in 1925, the assessee was compelled to file a suit in the Court to enforce payment of the amount then due. A compromise was eventually agreed upon and a decree was passed by embodying the terms of settlement. Under this decree the debtor was to pay to the assessee a sum of Rs. 3,75,000, in full settlement of all claims on or before July 31, 1931. In the meantime this sum was not to carry interest. In the event of the amount not being paid by the due date the zamindari was to become the absolute property of the assessee's family. By this decree a Receiver was appointed and it was a term of the compromise that any moneys which the assessee received from the Receiver should be set off against the Rs. 3,75,000, and that the debtor should only be responsible for the balance. It was, however, stipulated that in the event of the balance not being paid the whole of the zamindari would still become the property of the assessee's family. From July 28, 1928, the date of the compromise decree, to July 31, 1931, Rs. 42,000 was paid into Court by the Receiver as the net rent collections for that period. This amount was later on paid to the assessee. The sum due to be paid to the assessee under the terms of the compromise decree on July 31, 1931, was not paid and in consequence his family became the absolute owners of the zamindari. The estate was not, however, handed over to the assessee until February 2, 1933. But in that year the assessee's title to the zamindari was challenged. The litigation did not end until September 2, 1936, when the title of the assessee's family to the property was finally decided. The assessee, however, had induced the income-tax authorities to agree to the assessment being made when the mortgage transaction was closed. In assessing the assessee as the manager of the family for the year 1937-38, the income tax authorities included the profit which they calculated had been made out of this mortgage transaction. The assessee contended that as the amounts paid to him in cash were received by him more than three years before the year of account they were not assessable:

Held, (1) that Rs. 42,000 representing rents which the Receiver collected from the tenants of the agricultural lands of the zamindari could not be regarded as agricultural income inasmuch as the assessee was neither the owner of the zamindari when monies were collected nor in the position of a usufructuary mortgagee;

(2) that the assessee was not entitled in law to escape assessment on the profit which was made out of this mortgage transaction. On his own showing this transaction did not close until the High Court had given its decision in 1936 and, therefore, it was not until that year profits could properly be calculated. In these circumstances the income tax authorities were fully entitled to assess on that basis;

Income-tax—contd.

(3) that under the terms of the compromise decree the assessee got the whole of the zamindari plus the Rs. 42,000. The Rs. 42,000 was part of the profit which was made out of the transaction, and, therefore, no deduction could be allowed in respect of that amount. *AL. VR. S. VEERAPPA CHETTIAR v. Assessable income—Animals purchased in British India and sold at profit in foreign country—Profits arise at place of sale—Profits not brought into British India are not assessable to income-tax.

An assessee did business of exporting goats and sheep from India to Colombo and of selling them there at a profit:

Held, that the profit made by the assessee could only be calculated on what the goats and sheep actually cost him and the amounts at which they were actually sold in Colombo. The figures in the invoices, whether inflated or deflated would not matter.

Held, also that the profit arose in the place of sale and that the profits derived from the sale in a foreign country of animals purchased in British India were not assessable to income-tax when the profits had not been received or brought into British India. S. V. P. SUDALAIMANI NADAR v. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, MADRAS Mad. 76 S B

Estoppel—Income-tax Authorities coming to conclusion in previous year that certain debts had not become bad—If can come to conclusion in next accounting year that those debts had become bad long before.

Where income tax officials have, after enquiry, proceeded to assess the assessee on a certain basis though they may be entitled to reopen the enquiry, they cannot arbitrarily change the assessment simply on the ground that the succeeding officer does not agree with the preceding officer's finding. But if he wants to do so, there should be facts which would entitle him to do it. If fresh facts come to light which on an investigation would entitle the Income-tax Officer to come to a different conclusion from that of his predecessor he is entitled to re-open the question. The Commissioner of Income-tax is justified under the law to disallow the claim of the assessee in respect of the alleged bad debts on the ground that these debts had become bad long before the accounting year, though previous to the accounting year the claim was disallowed on the ground that it was premature and that the debts had not become bad till then provided fresh materials and facts come to the knowledge of the Income-tax Authorities on the second occasion. *KANIRAM GANPAT RAI v. Association of individuals resembling Hindu undivided family falls under s. 3—Whether assesses form association within meaning of s. 3 depends upon facts—Assesses held formed association within meaning of s. 3 and were owners of property under s. 9 and consequently could be assessed under s. 9 (1).

The words 'association of individuals' appearing in s. 3, Income Tax Act, if construed on the ejusdem generis principle are to be construed with reference not merely to the word 'firm' immediately preceding them, but with reference to the other associations of individuals namely, a Hindu undivided family and company which appear in the section. An association of individuals resembling a Hindu undivided family is an association of individuals contemplated by s. 3. The question whether the assesses formed an association of individuals within the meaning of s. 3 is a question which must depend upon the particular facts and circumstances of each case:

Held, on facts that the seven assesses formed an association within the meaning of s. 3 and that the association of individuals, formed by the seven assesses were the owners of the property within the meaning of s. 9 and that there could be no doubt that as owners they could be assessed under s. 9, part 1. *COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX v. Held, that all the profits of the Company accrued or arose in British India and the guaranteed interest, therefore, received by the Company was liable to assessment. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, MADRAS v. MADRAS AND SOUTHERN MAHRATTA RAILWAY CO. LTD. Mad. 544 S B

s. 4 (2)—Assessee, if should receive profits in India in exact form in which they were made—Available profits more than sufficient to cover remittance—Remittance, if presumed to be out of profits.

A person who has income accruing to him in a foreign country is at perfect liberty to keep it there, or to spend or utilize it in that or any other country in any way he thinks fit. His liability to tax arises not because he makes the profits but because he brings or receives them into British India. It is not necessary that he should receive those profits in the exact form in which they were made, but he must receive them into British India substantially as profits. If the remittance is traceable, and is traced to the assessee's foreign profits there would be ground for holding that the Act is attracted.

If there are available profits more than sufficient to cover the remittance, the presumption to start with is that the remittances came out of the profits, though ultimately the question to a large extent is one of fact. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, MADRAS v. V. NADIMUTHU PILLAI Mad. 733 S B

A resident of Tanjore District owned some immovable property in Saigon in Indo-China, from which he derived income in the shape of rent. He had kept an account in a Bank in Saigon and had a right to overdraw it to a certain limit. In the year of account he paid out of his net income into his account and reduced his overdraft to certain extent. While the overdraft was still at that figure he withdrew certain sum which was less than the net income and remitted it to British India.

Held, that the remittance could not be treated merely as remittance of the proceeds of a loan. The remittance could be properly assessed to income-tax under s. 4 (2) as a receipt of foreign income in British India. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, MADRAS v. V. NADIMUTHU PILLAI Mad. 733 S B

— s. 6 (vi), (iv)—Assessee carrying on extensive business in Ayurvedic medicines and also maintaining a dramatic troupe—Troupe giving performances at assessee's business premises at different places—Prices for admission charged—Profits arising from troupe performances held income from "other sources", within meaning of s. 6 (vi).

The assessee carried on an extensive business in the manufacture and sale of Ayurvedic medicines at Kottakkal, Palghat and Calicut, where he owned premises in which he sold medicines. One of his other activities was the maintaining of a dramatic troupe which gave public performances in the Malabar District, Cochin and Travancore at certain seasons of the year. At each place, adjoining the premises used by him for the sale of his medicines was a hall in which the assessee's dramatic troupe also gave performances. At all the performances prices for admission were charged;

Held, that the assessee maintained the troupe on a commercial basis, and whether he did so for the purpose of advertising his Ayurvedic medicines was not material. The maintenance of the troupe was not a hobby but a possible source of income and the profits arising therefrom were income from "other sources" within the meaning of s. 6 (vi), Income Tax Act, even if it could not be classified as income from a business under s. 6 (iv). VAIDYARATNAM P. The assessee company entered into a ginning contract with the mills. It undertook to mill cotton for the mills for a period of ten years at a reduced rate and as a consideration the mill exchanged their 20,000 shares for the 1,000 shares of the company. The assessee company contended that the exchange shares and the benefit of the ginning contract must be regarded as one transaction and entirely of a capital nature and since the mills had been allowed to treat it as being a transaction of a capital nature, the company must be allowed to treat it in the same way.

Held, that the arrangement by which a proportion of the shares of the mills was issued to the company in respect of the ginning contract was not a transaction of a capital nature and the benefit received by the company represented profits received in the year of payment. The difference between the values of the exchanged shares must be allocated to the ginning contract and as such was profit in the hands of the company assessable to the tax. The fact that the gain was not in money but in money's worth, viz., shares, was immaterial.

Held, also that the income-tax authorities were right in adopting the market-value in respect of the 20,000 shares of the mills allotted to the company. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, MADRAS v. HARVEYS LTD., TUTICORIN Mad. 778 S B

The original cost of any particular asset is entirely a question of fact and like any other question of fact depends upon the evidence produced to prove it. The mere production of documentary evidence showing that a contract has been made for purchasing assets at a certain price does not conclusively establish the correctness of a claim made by an assessee that, for the purpose of s. 10 (2) (vi) the original cost is the amount shown in the document. Where the circumstances show that an assessee has arranged to put an entirely fictitious price on his assets it is open to the Income-tax Authorities to refuse to accept that price and to ascertain what the true value is. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX MADRAS v. Where the landlord of a holding is a lawyer, his conduct in taking care to see that receipts for rent were granted to the original tenant's sons and grandsons, not in their own names, but in the name of the original tenant is, of greater significance and suggests that, while reluctant to evict the original tenant's sons he did not admit that they had and was anxious to prevent their acquiring permanent rights in the land. *Chagganlal Marwari v. Permanent tenancy—Tenant mortgaging land—He must show that landlord was aware of and acquiesced in the transaction, in order to create inference of permanent tenancy.

In order, to create an inference that the landlord had made a permanent settlement of the land, it is incumbent on the tenants to show, not merely that the successors of the original tenant and persons who were ready to lend money to them had proceeded on the assumption that the original tenant had permanent rights in the land, but that the landlord, had been aware of and acquiesced in these transactions. The mere fact that the successors of the original tenant had mortgaged the land and the mortgage-deed recited that the land was permanently settled and the mortgage had purchased the land in execution of the mortgage-deed is not sufficient to prove the permanent tenancy when there is no evidence to show that the landlord had recognised the mortgagee as his tenant after the mortgagee had purchased an interest in the property in execution of his mortgage decree. *CHAGGANLAL MARWARI v. Rent, suit for—Held on facts that the lease was not valid—Compromise decree in previous ejectment suit did not operate as res judicata—Defendants were not estopped by reason of previous rent suit from alleging that plaintiff was not their landlord—Estoppel—Res judicata.

In 1914, a Padhan of certain estate granted a lease of certain land to one G. In the following year G settled plot No. 1618 with the father of the defendants by means of a registered patta and in 1925 the defendants' father executed a kabuliyat in respect of plot No. 1618 in favour of the Receiver who was then in possession of the estate. In 1929, the plaintiff who was the proprietor of the estate sued the defendants for possession of this plot alleging that neither the Padhan nor the Receiver had any right to settle the land. The suit was compromised on August 23, 1930. It was agreed that the defendants should retain possession not only of plot No. 1618 but also of the other two plots on the terms mentioned in a kabuliyat executed by the defendants in favour of the plaintiff on August 19, 1930. This kabuliyat evidenced the grant of the land for a term of 20 years but was not registered. In 1931, the plaintiff sued G to eject him from the land leased to him in 1914 including plot No. 1618. The suit was eventually dismissed by the High Court on the ground of limitation. In the meanwhile, however, in 1934 and 1935, the plaintiff had obtained rent decrees against the defendants on the basis of the kabuliyat of 1930. As a result of the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit, G served a notice on the defendants calling upon them to take a fresh settlement of plot No. 1618 from him or to quit this plot. In 1936, the defendants were recorded as tenants under G in the Record of Rights. In 1937 the plaintiff sued the defendants for rent of plot No. 1618 and other two plots;

Held (i) that the kabuliyat of 1930 was not by itself sufficient to create a valid lease as there was no corresponding patta executed by the plaintiff;

(ii) that the compromise of 1930 did not constitute a valid lease but even if it constituted a lease it was rendered inadmissible in evidence by s. 49, Regis. Act for the purpose of proving the lease for creating any interest under it as it was not registered;

(iii) that as the defendants compromised the suit of 1929 by accepting a fresh settlement from the plaintiff it may be safely assumed that they accepted the position that the settlements of 1915 and 1925 did not confer upon them any right to retain the land as against the plaintiff; but the question whether the compromise in which that suit ended constituted a valid lease in favour of the defendants was not and could not be the subject-matter of decision in the litigation of 1929 either by the Court or by the parties themselves, and did not operate as res judicata on the question which arose in this present litigation, namely, whether the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the plaintiff and the defendants;

(iv) that the rent decrees of 1931 and 1935 did not preclude the defendants from alleging that the relationship of landlord and tenants did not exist between the plaintiff themselves. JAGDISH CHANDRA DEO DHABAL DEB v. BISESWAR LAL AGARWALA

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 3—Debt remains but remedy is barred.

The effect of s. 3, Lim. Act, is to bring about the automatic dismissal of suits, appeals and applications founded upon debts or causes of action which, according to their various periods of limitation, are time-barred. What the Lim. Act does not do is to extinguish the debt. The debt remains, but the remedy is destroyed. THAKUR PRASAD CHAUDHARI v. OFFICIAL LIQUIDATOR BENARES BANK LTD. All. 839

s. 4—Applicability—Promissory note—On last day for suit on pro-note Courts closed—On re-opening day payee assigning pro-note and assignee filing suit on very day—Suit held maintainable.

The wording of s. 3, Lim. Act indicates that s. 4 does not lengthen the period of Limitation prescribed. So that suits to which s. 4 can be applied are, therefore, clearly not suits instituted during the period of limitation prescribed. Section 4 deals with one of the exceptions to the general rule that a suit filed after the period of limitation prescribed shall be dismissed.

On last day of limitation for filing a suit on a pro-note the Courts were closed for the summer recess. On the re-opening day the payee under the promissory note assigned his rights in the promissory note to other person and on the very same day the assignee filed the suit:

Held, that on the date of the assignment there was an interest that could be assigned. Section 4 applied to the case and the suit was maintainable. NITHOOR THIMMANNA BHAT v. AITHAPPA ADYANTHAYA Mad. 401

s. 4—Suit triable both by Village Munsif and District Munsif—Limitation expiring during vacation of latter Court and suit filed on first opening day—Former Court open during latter's vacation—Suit, if within time—Madras Village Courts Act (I of 1889), ss. 13, 20.

The Court ought not to imply that a litigant should be deprived of his right to go to a normal Court subject to normal procedure because a Court of a very special nature, the village Court, happened to be open to him. To take away the right given by the Lim. Act requires, some more substantial basis than implication.

Where, therefore, a suit which is triable by both the Village Munsif and the District Munsif and the limitation for which has expired during long vacation of District Munsif's Court, is instituted in that Court on the opening day of that Court, the suit is within limitation under s. 4, Lim. Act. It is not barred by limitation merely because the Village Munsif's Court was open during vacation of the District Munsif's Court and the suit could have been instituted there, because, prima facie the plaintiff is entitled to sue in the District Munsif's Court and there is no compulsion to go to the Village Munsif's Court. BONDA SUBBA RAO v. KANDREGULA NARASIAH Mad. 434

ss. 4, 19—Acknowledgment expiring on date when the Courts are closed for vacation—Fresh acknowledgment, if can be executed on date when the Court re-opens, in order to save limitation.

Section 4 of the Lim. Act has nothing to do with computing the period prescribed under s. 19, Lim. Act. Where on the date when the previous acknowledgment was due to expire the Courts were closed for the summer vacation, the limitation would not be saved even if the fresh acknowledgment was executed on the day when the Courts re-opened. The argument that because a suit could have been instituted on the old acknowledgment when the Courts re-opened the party could accept the fresh acknowledgment while still he had right to sue, is not good. *SHIVJI RAM v. s. 14—Onus to prove good faith lies on person claiming benefit of s. 14.

A person who claims to come within s. 14, Lim. Act, has to show that in pursuing his remedy in other proceedings he acted in good faith; the burden of showing lack of good faith is not on his opponent. This is made clear by O. VII, r. 6, Civil P. C., and s. 103, Evi. Act. SRI KASIKANANDA GNANACHARYA SWAMIGAL v. SARAVANAPERUMAL PILLAI Mad. 328 F B

s. 14—Plaint returned for presentation to proper Court for want of pecuniary jurisdiction—Plaintiff striking off part of claim to bring it within jurisdiction and representing amended plaint on date when suit was time-barred—Suit held must be deemed to have been instituted on date of representation and was barred—Plaintiff held could not claim benefit of s. 14.

A Court which has no jurisdiction cannot pass orders in the suit beyond directing the plaint to be presented to the proper Court and giving a direction with regard to the costs incurred upto the time of the return of the plaint.

A plaint was presented within limitation to the Court which had no pecuniary jurisdiction to try it and was, therefore, returned by the Court for presentation to the proper Court. The plaintiff amended the plaint by striking out a part of his claim in order to bring his claim within jurisdiction and represented it to the same Court. On the date of such representation the claim had become time-barred. The amendment was allowed by the Court and the plaint was treated as a continuation of the original plaint:

Held, that the suit must be deemed to have been instituted on the date of the representation of the plaint which the Court had jurisdiction to accept and was, therefore, barred by limitation. The plaintiff could not claim the benefit of s. 14 Lim. Act, because he deliberately undervalued his relief in the first instance. THADI CHANDRAYYA v. YAITLA SEETHANNA Mad. 646

The expression "the remaining provisions of this Act shall not apply" in the amended s. 29 Lim. Act simply means that they are not to apply proprio vigore, that is, merely by virtue of the Lim. Act, itself, and that if they are to apply, the grounds for applying them must be found in the special or local Act itself. The Cantonments (House Accommodation) Act is a special Act and s. 5 Lim. Act does not apply to an appeal under s. 29, Cantonments (House Accommodation) Act. CHHEDA LAL JAIN v. OFFICER, COMMANDING STATION MEERUT CANTT. All. 404

—Arts. 7, 102—Suit by village barber for remuneration for services rendered—Article applicable.

Article 7, Lim. Act is confined to suits for the wages of a household servant, artisan or labourer. Village barbers are not household servants. They are not labourers in the sense in which the term 'labourer' is used in that Article. It is used there with reference to a man who does work chiefly requiring bodily strength. That are not also artisans, though the modern hairdresser who works on the heads of fashionable ladies, may be considered an artists. Consequently a suit by a village barber for remuneration for services rendered, is governed by Art. 102 and not by Art. 7, Lim. Act. The mere fact that a village barber who may not be as highly skilled as a person as a village carpenter or a village blacksmith gets a longer period of limitation would not justify the Court in straining the meaning of the words employed in Art. 7. *TULSIRAM v. —Arts. 74, 75—Instalment bond with default provision—Article applicable.

In the ordinary way when a debt is payable by instalments and there is no default provision, a new cause of action arises upon each default, and the plaintiff can recover in respect of instalments falling due within three years before suit, [vide Art. 74]. But if there is a default provision, Art. 74 cannot be relied upon, and under Art. 75 if the plaintiff sues more than three years from the first default and there is no waiver, the suit is totally time-barred, that is he cannot recover even those instalments which fell due within three years of suit. But facts should be so interpreted, if possible, as favouring the view that the creditor has waived the exercise of the option on the first instalment when he bases his suit on subsequent default

Art. 75—Option of suing for whole sum on default of six-monthly instalments—Suit, when should be instituted—Waiver—Limitation.

In a case of an instalment bond payable in monthly instalments which default cause giving an option to the creditor to sue for the whole amount on failure of six instalments, under the provisions of Art. 75 the creditor can institute that suit within three years of the 6th default, and in that suit he can claim not only the instalment still outstanding at the date of the suit and the instalments which had fallen due within three years of the suit, but also the six instalments which constitute his cause of action. The principle which holds good in regard to the first exercise of the option under the default clause holds equally good in respect of a claim founded on subsequent defaults and accompanied by a waiver of the option which accrues to the plaintiff on the earlier default. In effect the plaintiff is in any case entitled to claim the instalments of three and a half years, that is 42 past instalments in addition to the instalments still remaining, in the future at the date of the suit. *GAYA PRASAD v. appeal and not from date of dismissal of restoration application.

The plaintiff's suit as well as the first appeal, were both dismissed with costs. The second appeal was also dismissed with costs for his failure to file talbana in time. He filed an application for restoration of the second appeal which was also dismissed. The respondents sought to compute the period of limitation for the execution of the decree for costs of the suit and appeals from the date of the dismissal of the plaintiff's application for restoration of the second appeal:

Held, that the restoration application must be treated as an application for review and since it had been rejected, time for execution of the decree for costs of suit and appeals ran from the date on which the second appeal was dismissed. MOHAMMAD NAQIR v. ALAUDDIN AHMAD Pat. 608

Art. 182 (3), (2)—“Review of judgment,” meaning explained—Review application rejected—Art. 182 (3), if applies.

The words “when there has been a review of judgment” in Art. 182 (3), Lim. Act must mean a review by some one who can review the judgment, that is to say, by the Court which pronounced the judgment to be reviewed. Hence the article will have no application where an application for review has been rejected, because in that case there has not been a review of judgment. The words “review of judgment” cannot be construed to mean proceedings for review of judgment. MOHAMMAD NAQIR v. ALAUDDIN AHMAD Pat. 608

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938)—Appellate Court's decree declaring liability for first time—No written application raising plea for relief under Act before Appellate Court—Proper procedure.

When a liability is being declared in the Appellate Court's decree for the first time and a plea is open to the defendants under the Act there should be a written application raising this plea before the Appellate Court and on such application the Appellate Court should either give its own decision or reserve in its decree the right to have the matter decided by the Court below.

It is doubtful whether an order reserving a plea under the Mad. Agri. Relief Act for subsequent adjudication should be passed in the absence of an express prayer for the benefits of the Act. But the irregularity, if irregularity it be, should not deprive the defendants of their remedy when both parties have treated the order as binding upon them. *KANNABHIRAN PILLAI v. A debt for the repayment of which a decree has been passed after the commencement of the Mad. Agri. Clause (1) of s. 8, Mad. Agri. Relief Act clearly contemplates the debt incurred before October 1, 1932, as the original debt which ultimately ripened into a decree, and consequently it must be the date of the original debt which is the governing factor and not the date of the decrees. No appeal lies from an order under s. 19, Mad. Agri. Relief Act, dismissing the application of a judgment-debtor even if an execution petition is pending in any Court. The rules issued by Govt. in October 1939, providing for appeal in such cases, have no retrospective effect. Orders under s. 19 of the Act cannot be deemed to be orders under s. 47, Civil P. C. Application under s. 19 is to be made to the Court which passed the decree, not to the Court which is executing the decree. It is clear from s. 11, City Tenants' Protection Act that the issue of the necessary notice is a condition precedent to the filing of the suit itself. Prima facie, when the section talks of notice to the tenant, it must include all the tenants if there are several tenants in respect of the same land. Hence all the joint tenants and their assignees must be served with a notice and a notice sent to one joint tenant only, is not sufficient to found suit for ejectment against all the tenants. Particularly in the case of the City Tenants' Protection Act there is greater reason to hold that the plaintiff must serve notice upon the persons who are entitled to the lease-hold interest at the time when he seeks to eject. The defect of non-service cannot be cured by adding some of them as defendants later on. RAHMAT BI SAHEBA v. R. KRISHNA DOSS LALA

One R was a licensed distiller and owned an arrack distillery at B. Under the terms of his license he was required to maintain depots for the sale of arrack at various places in the District. One of these places was A. The depot at A was in charge of an agent of R and he used to sell arrack to licensed retail dealers. The price was fixed by the Govt. and the sales were restricted to licensed retail vendors. The money received in respect of arrack sold at the A depot was paid by R's agent into the treasury the same evening. R's agent in charge of A depot entered into contracts for the sale of arrack on behalf of his master who made profits on these transactions:

Held, that as a person who sells goods in a particular place must be deemed to be carrying on business in that place R must be deemed to be selling arrack at A. The fact that the prices which he charged were fixed by the Govt. did not make his transactions any the less sales: nor did the fact that the R's only customers at A were licensed retail dealers alter the character of his transactions. The fact that R's agent was required to pay into the treasury at the close of a day's business the moneys which he received for the arrack sold that day had no bearing on the question and the same could be said with regard to the keeping of accounts at B. R sold arrack at A and, therefore, was carrying on business at A within the meaning of s. 93 of the Mad. District Municipalities Act. It would be a different matter if all contracts for the supply of arrack were made in B and goods were merely delivered in A through an agent. *MUNICIPAL COUNCIL, ADONI v. G. V. C. Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908, as amended in 1936), ss. 3 (2), 181, 77, (3) (10)—Lands admitted to be kambattam within Mokhasa village—Village, if "estate" within meaning of Act before amendment—Land-holder possessing private land within estate selling kudivaram right—Landlord must be deemed to have converted land into ryoti land—Additional terms, if alter nature of transaction or whether void—Instrument held converted kambattam land into ryoti land—Additional terms stipulating for payment of fixed rent, interest on rent arrears, making rent first charge on land and entitling landholder to trees standing on land at date of contract, held not inconsistent with ryoti tenure.

Where the lands are admitted to be kambattam lands within a Mokhasa village, it follows that the village was an "estate" within the meaning of the Mad. Estates Land Act, even before the amendment in 1936.

Where a landholder possesses private lands within an "estate" and sells the kudivaram right in those lands but retains the melwaram right he must be deemed to have converted the lands into ryoti lands, and additional terms will not alter the nature of the transaction. The additional terms will stand, provided that they are not inconsistent with what the statute states shall apply to ryoti tenure. To the extent that the additional terms are inconsistent with ryoti tenure they must be regarded as being void.

The khat executed by the vendee embodying the terms of the contract, after reciting that the landholder had agreed to sell to him the kudivaram right in the lands for Rs. 33,192 and that they had received the purchase consideration, proceeded: "You have hereby sold to us all the rights possessed by you in the said lands excepting the melwaram rights there to. Therefore, in the matter of our enjoying the said lands henceforth from son to grandson and so on in succession with powers of alienation by way of gift, exchange, sale, etc., you or your heirs shall never raise dispute either with us or with our heirs. Then followed the other terms relating to the sale, stipulating for the payment of a fixed rent and for the payment of interest at ten annas per cent. per mensem on arrears of rent. The cist payable to the landholder was to be a first charge on the land, and the landholder was to be entitled to the trees standing on the land at the time of the contract, but trees grown after that date were to belong to the vendees:

Held per Full Bench (Krishnaswamy Ayyangar, J., contra)—That the document read as whole operated to convert the kambattam lands into ryoti lands and that the additional terms were not inconsistent with ryoti tenure. CHELIKANI KONDAYYA RAO v. UPPALAPATI NAGANNA Mad. 470 F B

The fact that the Madras Govt. regarded the inam lands as falling within the Mad. Hereditary Village Offices Act is not binding on the Patna Court. But where a party concedes as the trial and also in first appeal that the inam lands in question were protected under the aforesaid Act, it is not open to him in second appeal to resile from his admission and to contend that it was not established that the lands in question were protected under the Act. *ANTARJYAMI NAIK v. Malicious prosecution. See Tort

Suit for damages—Essential—Municipal Corporation prosecuting Pleader in spite of his paying requisite license-fee—Pleader discharged on his producing requisite license—Pleader's suit against Corporation for damages for malicious prosecution—Pleader held had no cause of action—Corporation, if can rely on entries or absence thereof in their books—Corporation Officer responsible for prosecution knowing that Pleader had paid license-fee—Malice or reasonable and probable cause for prosecution.

There are three sorts of damage any one of which is sufficient to support an action for malicious prosecution. First, damage to a man's fame, as if the matter whereof he is accused be scandalous. Secondly, damage to his person, as where a man is put in danger to lose his life, limb or liberty. Thirdly, damage to his property, as where he is forced to expend money in necessary charges to acquit himself of the crime of which he is accused. It is no answer to an action for malicious prosecution to show simply that the offence, which was the subject-matter of the prosecution, is punishable with fine only.

A Pleader was prosecuted by the Municipal Corporation for practising without licence in spite of his having paid the requisite licence-fee. He was, however, discharged on his production of the license. The Pleader thereupon instituted a suit for malicious prosecution:

Held, that there was no danger to life, limb or liberty in the case because failure to take out a license when practising a profession was punishable with fine only. Similarly the matter of the plaintiff was accused could not be described as scandalous. The charges incurred by the plaintiff in engaging the Pleader could not also be said to be justified. If there had been witnesses to be cross-examined, it might have been different, but as it was the plaintiff, who himself was a professional man, had a complete answer to the charges in the form of the license granted by the Corporation, the plaintiff had no cause of action.

Held, further that the Corporation could not rely on the entries or the absence of the entries in their books or the absence of corrections in their books which were due solely to their own failure to maintain proper supervision. If any Corporation Official who was responsible for the prosecution knew that the plaintiff had paid his license-fee there was no reasonable and probable cause and equally there must have been malice. JATINDRA MOHAN BANERJEE v. —After born son, if can challenge—Cause of action—His rights.

An after-born son has no cause of action to sue for a declaration that a mortgage is not binding on him nor can he create a cause of action for himself by waiting until he is dispossessed and then suing for possession; nor can he set up rights while he could not urge in a suit of his own by way of defence when the mortgagee sues. The cause of action to challenge the mortgage arises at the date of its execution and hence a son born and conceived after that date cannot challenge the mortgage though he still has a right to redeem. KASHINATH VISHVANATH JOT v. BAPURAO Nag. 189

—Anomalous or by conditional sale—Test to determine—Mortgage held anomalous.

The test whether a particular document is a mortgage by conditional sale or is some other kind of mortgage, is not what the parties have said it is, but is rather whether it fulfils those statutory requirements which the Legislature has laid down. The parties can call it by whatever name they like, but that will not make it a mortgage of a particular kind, unless it complies with the requirements of such a mortgage as defined by the Act.

A mortgage-deed stated that the property was mortgaged without possession. There was a covenant to pay interest, then a covenant to pay the principal and the accumulated compound interest, "at the stipulated period," that is, at the end of the period of five years. Thirdly, a provision that the mortgagors were not to be entitled to redeem earlier than at the expiration of the five years, and finally it provided.....that in case of non-payment of the entire amount of principal, interest and compound interest the mortgagees would after the expiry of the stipulated period, have power to obtain proprietary possession of the entire property mortgaged by bringing a suit for a decree for foreclosure and that the mortgagors would not have any objection thereto:

Held, that the mortgage was not a mortgage by conditional sale but an anomalous mortgage. UJAGAR LAL v. BAHADUR LOKENDRA SINGH All. 520

—Mortgage by undivided co-parcener of share in particular portion of family property—Rights of mortgagee and non-mortgaging co-parcener—Mortgage by undivided co-parcener of his share in particular part of family property—In subsequent partition in family, mortgaged property allotted to non-mortgaging co-parcener—Non-mortgaging co-parcener undertaking to pay-off mortgage—Mortgagee can sue non-mortgaging co-parcener on mortgage.

When an undivided co-parcener purports to mortgage his share in a particular part of the family property something less than that interest which passes on a mortgage by a man severely seized of the mortgaged property is transferred. The mortgagee's main right is, after foreclosing or purchasing his mortgagor's rights, to get defined by partition what it is that is mortgaged. In a case where the subject matter of the mortgage is the mortgaging co-parcener's share in a village the mortgagee would have the right to demand a partition and any Court entertaining such an application for partition, failing agreement, would be bound to partition the family property in accordance with justice and equity, that is to say, in the same way that a reasonable and honest co-parcener would agree to have the joint family property partitioned. The fact that there has been such a mortgage would not in the least debar a non-mortgaging co-parcener from having the family property partitioned as though there were no mortgage but it would debar the mortgaging co-parcener from assenting to any such partition as would imperil his mortgagee's rights. A Court entertaining such a suit for partition in such circumstances should, unless there are countervailing reasons due to interests other than those of the family calling for consideration, so divide the family property that the property mortgaged by the mortgaging co-parcener goes to that co-parcener and the non-mortgaging co-parcener gets other property.

Where an undivided co-parcener mortgages his share in a particular part of family property and on partition in the family the mortgaged property is allotted to non-mortgaging branch and the mortgage has not been taken into account (and of course where fraud or collusion does not enter into the story) the mortgagee cannot proceed against the subject-matter of his mortgage but has substituted for his security any property that has been given to his mortgagor in the partition. But if in fact the mortgaged property has been taken by a non-mortgaging branch and that branch has at the same time and as part of the partition arrangement undertaken to pay that mortgage-debt, then the true position is that the non-mortgaging co-parceners have in effect obtained the equity of redemption only and are liable in the first place to the mortgagee who may sue them on the mortgage. ATMARAMSAO v. BHUPENDRANATH Nag. 537 —Suit on—One of defendants claiming paramount title and disclaiming any interest in equity of redemption—Question of title, if can be decided.

In a mortgage suit no question of title arises. The mortgagee clearly has no interest and in fact cannot, if he wishes to succeed, challenge the title of his mortgagor. All that the Court is concerned with in a mortgage suit is the question of redemption. Only the persons who are interested in paying in order to save the property are necessary parties to the suit. All other matters are irrelevant. Where, therefore, in a mortgage suit one of the defendants claims a paramount title and disclaims all interest in the equity of redemption, this defendant must be discharged from the suit for the question of his title cannot be tried in such a case. Where in such a case the lower Court passes a wrong order, the High Court can interfere because the question of parties and persons is fundamental and goes to the very root of jurisdiction. SHAKUNTALABAI v. ROSHAN-LAL Nag. 19

Dower — Prompt — Lapse of time — Effect.

Although prompt dower, according to Muhammadan Law, is payable immediately on demand, yet in a large majority of cases it is rarely demanded and is rarely paid : in practice a Muhammadan husband generally gives little thought to the question of paying dower to his wife save when there is domestic disagreement, or when the wife presses for payment upon the husband's embarking upon a course of extravagance and indebtedness without making any provision for her. Lapse of time since marriage raises no presumption in favour of payment of dower. FAQIR BUX v. THAKUR PRASAD Oudh 588

Gift—Hiba-bil-iwaz — Essentials — Actual delivery of possession, if necessary—Declaration as to, in deed—Whether binding.

In the case of a hiba-bil-iwaz, only two conditions are necessary to establish the validity of such a transaction, (1) actual payment of consideration (iwaz), and (2) a bona fide intention on the part of the donor to divest himself in praesenti of the property and to confer it upon the donee. The adequacy of consideration is not material ; but whatever its amount, it must be actually and bona fide paid. As regards the second condition, the circumstances that no mutation was either claimed or obtained by the donee in the lifetime of the donor and that possession remained with the donor till his death, are wholly irrelevant. Delivery of possession, is not at all necessary in the case of a hiba-bil-iwaz. The declaration in the deed by the donor as regards the delivery of possession to the donee is binding upon the heirs and representative of the donor and is quite sufficient to establish delivery of possession even if it is necessary to do so. *MOHAMMAD KAZIM HUSAIN v. s. 151—Decree-holder to prove that decree cannot be satisfied against movable property of judgment-debtor—Nature of proof—Burden, when shifts—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss 101 106.

It is for the decree-holder to show in the first instance under s. 151, Oudh Rent Act that satisfaction of the decree cannot be obtained against the movable property of the judgment debtor but very little evidence is required to shift the burden on to the judgment-debtor. Whether a judgment-debtor has or has not movable property from which a decree may be satisfied is a matter specially within his own knowledge, and if the decree holder shows that there is reason to think that he has no such property, and files an affidavit to that effect it is for the judgment-debtor to prove that he has such property. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, PARTABGARH v. It is true that under s. 154 of the Oudh Rent Act where an under-proprietor creates any incumbrance and fails to pay to the proprietor all or any part of the rent subsequently accruing in respect of the land subject to the incumbrance the incumbrancer shall be liable to pay to the proprietor the whole or part of that rent as the case may be. This section lays down the liability of a mortgagee of any under proprietary tenure for payment of arrears of rent due to the superior proprietor but where the superior proprietor in his suit for rent did not make the mortgagee of the under-proprietor a party and sued the under-proprietor alone obtaining a decree against him and in execution of that decree has purchased the property put up for sale, the decretal amount is satisfied and the liability to pay rent by the mortgagee thus comes to an end. Section 152 of the Oudh Rent Act provides that where a decree is for an arrear of rent due in respect of an under-proprietary right the interest of a judgment-debtor in that right may be sold in execution of the decree. This shows that if the under-proprietary holding has been mortgaged by the judgment-debtor, the only thing that can be sold is the interest of the judgment-debtor, which in such a case would be his equity of redemption. The auction-purchaser therefore cannot claim priority against the mortgagee who is no longer liable for any payment under the provisions of s. 154. Hence in such a case the under-proprietary rent is not a charge on the mortgaged property and the mortgaged property can be sold in execution of the mortgage-decree. KANTZ BAQAR v. The presumption is, however, rebuttable and it is for the party denying the membership to rebut it. A certificate of registration is sufficient proof, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that a person is the partner of the firm and it is not necessary to prove that the application for registration bore his signature. FIRM HET RAM PADAM CHAND v. wards—Subsequent Government Notification dividing Municipality into sixteen wards—Appointment of Head Clerk neither revoked nor fresh formal appointment made—He, continuing to work—Head Clerk held public servant charged with preparation of electoral rolls.

The Chairman of a Municipality, acting under r. 13 (1) of the Bihar Municipal Election Rules, 1937 appointed a Head Clerk of the Municipality, to prepare the electoral rolls of all persons entitled to be registered as voters in each of the five wards into which the Municipality was divided at that time. Subsequently by a Govt. Notification the Municipality was divided into sixteen single seated wards instead of the former five plural-seated wards:

Held, that as the appointment of the Head Clerk was not revoked subsequent to the Govt. Notification and he continued to work as such he was public servant within the meaning of s. 167 read with s. 21, Expl. 2, I. P. C. The absence of his formal appointment subsequent to Notification was immaterial as the Head Clerk was indubitably "in actual possession of the situation of a public servant."

Held, further that the word "charged" in s. 167 is not to be very narrowly construed. It was no part of the ordinary duty of Head Clerk to prepare any electoral roll but as he was expressly appointed to prepare the electoral rolls under the Election Rules he was a public servant charged with the preparation of electoral rolls. BRJJBHARI v. —Murder—Common intention—Four persons taking part in commission of murder—No evidence to prove which of accused committed crime—All if can be convicted of murder.

Mere presence without proof of any act or omission done to facilitate the offence or at least without proof of the existence of a common intention will not be sufficient under s. 34, I. P. C., to support a conviction.

Where however four persons were inside the house in which a murder was committed and although the victim was crying out loud enough to be heard by the neighbours as well as those inside the house none of them did anything to prevent the commission of the crime:

Held, that the statutory duty was cast upon the persons who were inside the house by s. 44, Criminal P. C. to take measures to prevent the completion of the crime and as none of them did any such thing all of them must be held either to have taken an active part or by wilful acquiescence to have furthered the intention of all that the crime should be carried to its completion and that no outsider should have a chance to interfere.

Held, further that in the circumstances of the case even if there was no evidence to prove as to which of the persons present in the house committed the murder all the four could be convicted of murder. MAHADEO NATH KHETRI v. EMPEROR Pat. 622

s. 75—Case falling under s. 75—Trial under s. 260, Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), if bad—S. 75, whether creates separate offence.

While the circumstances of a case where s. 75, I. P. C., can be applied make it desirable that the offence should not be tried in a summary way and that in such cases if the trial has started in a summary way the provisions of sub-s. (2) of s. 260, Criminal P. C., should be followed, nevertheless it cannot be said that a trial in which a charge under s. 73, could be framed is necessarily bad in law because the offence is tried summarily. It may, indeed, almost always be inexpedient in the interests of justice to do so, but s. 75, is an enabling section and merely applies a principle; it does not create a separate offence or indeed, an offence at all and hence the question whether s. 260, Criminal P. C., applies to offences under s. 75, does not arise. EMPEROR v. SHIVBUX AMRO Sind 819.

s. 75—Court can take into consideration previous convictions apart from s. 75.

Previous convictions can however be taken into account under s. 14, Evi. Act even when s. 75, I. P. C., is not to be applied. After an accused has been convicted and before sentence is passed a Court can for the purpose of deciding what sentence should be passed, take into consideration previous convictions, any question of s. 75, apart. EMPEROR v. SHIVBUX AMRO Sind 819.

s. 75—S. 75 not to be applied to case but previous convictions to be taken into account—Summary trial is not appropriate.

A trial in a summary way is not an appropriate procedure when s. 75 is to be applied. Nor, indeed, would it be an appropriate procedure when s. 75, is not to be applied, but previous convictions are to be taken into account in determining what punishment within his ordinary powers a Magistrate should impose because of the limited nature of the sentence which may be passed under s. 202, Criminal P. C. EMPEROR v. SHIVBUX AMRO Sind 819.

s. 84—Circumstances to be considered in considering plea of insanity—Principles to be applied to case of insanity, stated.

Per Patanjali Sastri, J.—It is true that a mere lack of apparent motive for the deed does not necessarily or always lead to an inference of intellectual aberration or insanity, but a total lack of an apparent motive may in some cases, taken along with other facts legitimately give rise to an inference that the act was done under an insane impulse. Similarly, it is true to say, that a crime is not excused by its own atrocity. But it cannot be said that the nature of the act or the mode of perpetrating it can under no circumstances be taken into account in considering a plea of insanity. It may be that as a rule of prudence, Courts will be slow to infer from such material that the person committing the act was not conscious of its criminality. But there is no warrant for laying down, as a rule of evidence that one must look outside the act itself for the evidence as to how much the accused knew about it. The truth is that in dealing with all such cases no general rule can be applied and the only proper course to adopt is to decide each case on its own peculiar facts bearing in mind, of course, that the point for determination is whether the evidence before the Court is sufficient to establish that the person charged with the offence was not conscious of the nature of the act he was doing or that he was doing what was wrong or contrary to law. SANKAPPA SHETTY, In re Mad. 332.

A conflicting statement by a person is not necessarily a sign of insanity. SANKAPPA SHETTY, In re Mad. 332.

s. 84—Plea of insanity—Burden of proof.

Per King and Patanjali Sastri, JJ.—The burden of proving insanity is cast upon the accused by s. 105, Evi. Act. and under s. 84, I. P. C., he must prove that at the time of the killing he was by reason of unsoundness of mind, incapable of knowing the nature of his act or that he was doing what was wrong or contrary to law. SANKAPPA SHETTY, In re Mad. 332.

ss. 84, 302—Held on facts that plea of insanity was not established and accused guilty of murder—Case held did not call for extreme penalty.

A loving husband and an affectionate father who had never been known to have beaten or ill-treated his wife on any previous occasion suddenly killed her in a closed room bolted from inside by battering her head and body with a sitting plank inflicting as many as twenty wounds and bruises. There was an absence of any motive for the crime. The accused pleaded insanity. The evidence showed that the accused had been strange and eccentric in his actions for some days previous to the committing of the crime. He was labouring under a delusion that some relation of his had given him drugs and that krutrima (witch craft) had been done to him. After the room in which the occurrence took place was broken open by five persons, the accused made no attempt to escape but appeared dazed:

Held, (per King and Gentle, JJ., Patanjali Sastri, J., contra.)—That the offence committed was murder and the plea of insanity was not established.

Held, further that the case did not call for the extreme penalty of the law and the sentence of transportation was proper as there was no premeditation and the accused must have received what he felt to be considerable provocation before he attacked his wife in the way he did. SANKAPPA SHETTY, In re Mad. 332.

s. 99—Constable not having power to arrest trying to arrest person and meeting with resistance by third person—S. 99, if applies.

While the protection of s. 99, I. P. C., extends to acts that are not strictly justifiable by law, it does not extend to acts which are ultra vires and have no legal basis. The section applies indeed to a case where an official has done wrongly what he might have done rightly but not to cases where the act could not have been done rightly at all by the official concerned.

Consequently where a Police constable could not have rightly exercised the authority he did in arresting a person unless he had promoted himself to be an officer in charge of a Police Station or to the rank of a Sub-Inspector, there is no legal basis to his action and if the constable is met with resistance by third person

Under s. 167, I. P. C., there is no difference between the preparation and the framing of an electoral roll. The signature and the delivery of the electoral rolls under r. 13 (1), Bihar Municipal Election Rules are operations subsequent to the preparation under sub-r. (1), and serve to indicate that the preparation was complete, but cannot be said to be essential to the framing required by s. 167, I. P. C., for it is not always impossible to show in other ways that the process of preparing was complete.

A Head Clerk of a Municipality appointed under r. 13 (1) of the Bihar Municipal Election Rules, 1937, to prepare the electoral rolls, prepared them but went away on leave before signing or delivering them and they were therefore, signed and delivered by his locum tenens:

Held, that for s. 167, I. P. C., to apply the preparing and framing must be complete and final so far as the author is concerned, and it was difficult to exclude anything that it would have been permissible for the Head Clerk to do to the rolls until the time came for his signing them and delivering them. —ss. 295, 379, 144, 143, 425—Hut on agricultural land, if could be turned, without knowledge of landlord into mosque—Saying of prayers—Whether gives any sacred character to such hut—Felling down of such hut by persons other than landlord—Offence, if falls under s. 295—Conviction under ss. 420-144—Charge under s. 379 referring to individual accused—No finding that any of accused individually took away materials—Conviction held cannot be sustained.

The use of a hut on an agricultural land, without the permission of the landlord, as a public mosque with the azan or public call to prayers is entirely unwarranted; and if the hut is not a mosque but a particular community were only attempting to convert it into one, it is clearly not, "a place of worship" under the law. Where none of the members of the community was in a position validly to make the implied dedication a mere fact of saying azan does not make it a public mosque. The hut cannot also be regarded as "any object held sacred by any class of persons" within the meaning of s. 295. Nothing of religious reverence, no sacred character, could attach to the hut apart from its attempted conversion into a mosque as this attempt itself is contrary to law; to allow any sacred character to the hut would be to enable the community under the guise of religion to vest the shed as a public mosque in the religious body for whose observance it was to be used, to the detriment of the landlords, who had only settled the land with the tenant for agricultural purposes. Where the azan or public call to prayers is found to have begun only about a year before, the landlords do not lose by prescription their right to eject the tenant for the attempted perversion or misuse of the land, rendering it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy. Though this would not entitle others some of whom are amongst the landlords of the village, to take the law into their hands, yet their destruction of the hut does not constitute an offence under s. 295. The conviction under this section is bad in law.

That the hut standing on this land, though it was destroyed, was not a mosque properly so called does not mean the failure of the charges under ss. 144 and 143. Where the common object of destroying the mosque makes no reference to s. 295, and the destruction of the hut, even if it was not a mosque, clearly amounts in the circumstances to mischief as defined in s. 425, I. P. C., it follows that the unlawful assembly must be taken to have had the common object of committing mischief in respect of the hut. The conviction under ss. 144 or 143, as the case may be, is proper.

Where the charges under s. 379 did not refer to the common object of the unlawful assembly. But the charges of theft were intended by the Magistrate to refer to the acts of individual accused apart from their doings as members of the unlawful assembly and there was no finding that any of the accused individually took away any of the materials of the hut, the conviction under s. 379 against the accused cannot be sustained. *BECHAN JHA v. It would only be in a very exceptional case that this would be done. In fact the normal sentence for a youth of this age would be transportation for life. Section 304-A, Penal Code, must be read along with ss. 336, 337 and 338, of the Code: All the sections are confined in their operation to acts done without any criminal intent, apart from the rashness or negligence which is their essential ingredient. Reading s. 321, with s. 322, it is obvious that the guilt of an accused person remains just the same whether in seeking to inflict simple hurt or grievous hurt, as the case may be, upon one person he actually causes the intended hurt to that person or to some other.

The injury inflicted by accused on the head of the deceased was not such as to entail serious consequences to a man in normal health. It had healed up at the end of seven days, but he had a temperature and on this account the doctor advised him to remain in the hospital until the temperature had subsided. However, the deceased stated that he suffered from chronic malaria and that his fever was due to malaria, and he insisted on leaving the hospital. He was brought back to the hospital again. He was then partially paralyzed on the left side, and there was an abscess over the seat of the first injury, which, was healed. An operation was performed on the same day; the abscess was lanced, and about eight ounces of pus were removed, but he became unconscious and died. Had the deceased stayed in hospital as advised, even if the abscess on the injury had formed, it would have been a simple matter to have cured it and no abscess on the brain would have formed at all and the deceased would have recovered. The deceased suffered from chronic malaria, and this malaria lowered his power of resistance and helped the formation of pus when there was an open wound. Death was not due directly to the enlarged spleen or to the heart, but these contributed indirectly because they lowered the vitality and power of resistance of the deceased. Thus the immediate cause of his death was his debilitated condition for which the injury was in no way responsible:

Held, that the accused was guilty of causing simple hurt, with a weapon for cutting, punishable under s. 324, I. P. C.

Held, further that the fact that a dangerous weapon was used was often and might be indeed generally, a matter to be taken into account in deciding questions of intention; but circumstances alter cases, and, hav-

Amendment—Arguments in appeal before High Court heard—Amendment of cause title of plaint cannot be allowed.

It would be highly undesirable from every point of view to allow applications of the cause title of the plaint which are made after the whole case is argued, and the parties have an opportunity of knowing or at least guessing with some degree of accuracy what is going to happen to their case. *KUPPU GOVINDA CHETTIAR v. not removed—Further application to amend beyond limitation, held could not be allowed.

The plaintiff knew at an early stage of the proceedings that his plaint was defective. He was given an opportunity to amend his plaint. His amendment did not, however, remove the defect. He subsequently applied for further amendment:

Held, that in all the circumstances, and especially since the application for amendment was made well beyond the period of limitation no further indulgence could be granted to the plaintiff. BANWARI RAM v. MUHAMMAD YAR KHAN All. 72

Amendment—Proposed amendment should be submitted before leave is granted—Original claim based on renewal given to plaintiff of earlier pro-note in favour of deceased—Amendment suing on earlier pro-note as deceased's executor—Amendment, if alters suit.

It is usual and generally most desirable that a party desiring to amend his pleading should submit his proposed amendments in explicit form before the leave sought is granted, that is, he should formulate and state in writing the exact amendments for which he asks.

The fundamental character of the suit is not altered where the plaintiff first bases his claim on a renewal given to him of a pro-note, executed in favour of the deceased and subsequently amends his pleadings and sues on the original pro-note as executor of the deceased. *EUSOOF KARWA v. A pre-emption suit was decreed on payment of Rs. 1,800. This sum was deposited in Court and was taken out by the vendee. The pre-emptor subsequently applied for execution of his decree by being put in possession. But during these proceedings the pre-emptor and the vendee entered into a compromise whereby the vendee paid Rs. 2,000 to the pre-emptor to cover the cost of the land and the expenses incurred by him in the litigation and the pre-emptor agreed that the suit should be considered as dismissed. Rs. 2,000 was paid in the presence of the Court and the Court passed an order that the execution should be filed in full satisfaction :

Held, that the question whether a sale was a sale of land or not must depend on the circumstances of each particular case, and that there was an out and out sale of land by virtue of the compromise inasmuch as the land had vested in the pre-emptor by virtue of the decree when he deposited Rs. 1,800 in Court and he was at the time of the compromise the absolute owner of the property of which he could get possession by execution. The word "judgment" in cl. 13, Letters Patent (Rang.) means and is a decree in a suit by which the rights of the parties at issue in the suit are determined. For the purposes of appeals the various proceedings in an insolvency should be regarded as a series of "suits" arising out of one failure and that is a "judgment" for this purpose which finally determines the substantive rights of those concerned in any one such "suit". A decision, therefore, which finally determines the question whether a witness should or should not be further examined under s. 36 of the Presi. Towns Insol. Act, is a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 13 of the Letters Patent and is therefore, appealable. A "judgment", properly so called, must be an exercise of jurisdiction and therefore a refusal to exercise jurisdiction, at all events if it be a lawful refusal, cannot be a "judgment." s. 36—Discretion under s. 36 in refusing to summon witness or further examine him, if can be interfered with in appeal.

The discretion of the Court under s. 36 in refusing to summon or further to examine a witness is not lightly to be interfered with on appeal. It is not enough for the appellant to show that the discretion was wrongly exercised, but he must go further and show either that it was not exercised at all, or, if exercised, was exercised either unjudicially, or on a wrong principle of law, or on a wrong appreciation of the facts. But a right decision even if reached in the wrong way will not be interfered with. EBRAHIM MOHAMED BODI v. K. BA GYI Rang. 250

s. 36—Examination under s. 36, nature of—Right of.

The only right which the section gives to the Official Assignee or to any creditor who has proved is a right to apply to the Court to summon a witness. It is in the discretion of the Court whether or not it will do so at all, and if it does do so, the examination of the witness is, in theory, an examination by the Court; it is only as a matter of practice that the person applying for the summons is permitted to attend and question the person summoned at all. EBRAHIM MOHAMED BODI v. K. BA GYI Rang. 250

s. 36—Examination, when should be ordered—Fact that litigation against witness may ensue, if ground for refusing to examine witness.

The Court ought not to make an order for the examination of a witness under s. 36 of the Act unless there is ground for thinking that the order is likely to be of some use. Sub-sections (4) and (5) of s. 36 make it quite clear that the mere fact that the litigation against the witness may ensue cannot be a ground for refusing the examination. EBRAHIM MOHAMED BODI v. K. s. 36—Exercise of powers under s. 36.

Section 36 confers on the Court an extraordinary and inquisitorial, though certainly a necessary power, to be exercised in the interests of the due administration of the insolvent's estate without fear, but not without scrupulous regard to considerations of economy and of fairness to the person examined. EBRAHIM MOHAMED BODI v. K. BA GYI Rang. 250

s. 36—Scope of examination under s. 36.

It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule limiting the scope of a private examination under s. 36 and though the Court may (not must) think it proper to confine it to questions arising out of the matters stated in the affidavit leading to the summons there is certainly no rule that only those matters themselves may be put to the witness.

Section 36 is not in terms restricted to the examination of persons who are thought to be indebted to or possessed of part of the debtor's estate but extends to "any person whom the Court may deem capable of giving information respecting the insolvent, his dealings or property". tion to creditor without notice of insolvency, if protected.—Prior to adjudication insolvent obtaining loan from bank and undertaking to pay in monthly instalments from salary—Insolvent authorizing and requesting employer to pay instalments out of his salary—Completed assignment or charge, if created in favour of bank—Insolvent's adjudication, effect of, on contract—Amount ordered, by Court under s. 60 (2), if vested in Official Assignee and balance, if belonged absolutely to insolvent—Official Receiver, if can recover amount paid to bank out of such balance.

The insolvency law aims of equal and rateable distribution of the property of the insolvent among the creditors who are entitled to prove their debts in insolvency without any preference of one creditor over another. The property of the insolvent comprises also what is known as the after-acquired property, and the payments made by the insolvent to any of his creditors will be protected provided they are made before his adjudication and the creditor has no notice of the insolvency.

Sometimes before his adjudication, the insolvent got a loan from a bank during the pendency of a prior insolvency proceeding. The insolvent undertook to pay back the loan in monthly instalments out of his salary and authorized and requested his employer, the Railway Co., to pay the said instalments to the bank and the bank which had no notice of the insolvency as per contract continued to recover the instalments even after the adjudication, until the debts was fully recovered :

Held, (i) that on the date of the insolvency there was only an authority or direction and request by the debtor to the Railway Co., to pay a portion of his salary to the bank or at best a contract to assign the future salary as and when it was earned and that there was no completed assignment or charge. By the adjudication of the insolvent the contract was revoked and consequently the liability of the insolvent or his estate for breach of such contract was only in damages and the creditor was not entitled to enforce the transaction as against his subsequent salary, at any rate not against the assignee in bankruptcy.

(ii) that although any dealing by the insolvent with reference to after-acquired property was protected if the assignee acted bona fide and prayed value, no matter that he had knowledge of the insolvency, a distinction had been made between the insolvent's after-acquired property in general and his pays, salary or other income, by reason of the provisions contained in s. 60, Presi. Towns Insol. Act, and that only the amount ordered by the Court under s. 60 (2) vested in the Official Assignee; and the balance being at the absolute disposal of the insolvent, he was free to pay any one of his creditors in full and consequently the Official Receiver could not recover the amount paid by the insolvent to the bank out of such balance subsequent to his insolvency.

(iii) that the letter of the Official Assignee permitting the bank to collect the amount from the Railway Co. according to the contract amounted to a voluntary payment. OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE v. SECRETARY, M. & S. M. RAILWAY EMPLOYEES CO-OPERATIVE URBAN BANK, LTD.

Press (Emergency Powers) Act (XXIII of 1931), s. 4 (1) (a) and (d)—Common sense interpretation must be given to document complained of—Poem entitled "Labourers, the mainstay of the world", urging labourers not to tolerate exploitation of their masters and inciting bloody revolution and destruction of present social order by force—Poem held fell under s. 4 (1), cl. (a), and not under cl. (d).

A common sense interpretation must be given to the document complained of namely, the impression it gives to a man of ordinary common sense.

In order to show that certain words come under s. 4 (1) (a) of the Press (Emergency Powers) Act, it is unnecessary to show that the words tend to incite to, or to encourage the commission of a particular offence or offences. It is sufficient if they tend to incite to or to encourage the commission of cognizable offences of violence in general.

A poem in Hindi was entitled "Labourers—the mainstay of the world." It began emphasising that labourers are the mainstay of the present world and then proceeded to describe their unfortunate and pitiful lot. The author subsequently pointed out that though speechless to-day, when organized they would be as powerful as millions and this portion of the poem ended with these words: "Why are you helplessly tolerating the exploitation of your masters". The remaining lines were as follow :

"Labourers. Raise now the cry of Revolution.

The heavens will tremble, the Universe

Will shake and the flames of revolution

Will burst forth from land and water. You who have been the object of exploitation,

Now dance the fearful dance of destruction on this earth.

Truly, labourers. Only total destruction will create a new world order and that will bring happiness to the whole world":

Held, that the words "masters or exploiters" are too wide and vague to denote a definite or ascertainable class so as to come within cl. (d) of s. 4 (1) of the Act.

Held, further that the poem contained words tending to incite to or to encourage bloody revolution, and the destruction of the present social order by bloodshed and force and clearly came within s. 4 (1) (a) of the Act. BADRI NARAIN SINGH v. CHIEF SECRETARY TO GOVERNMENT, BIHAR

Promissory note—One of parties promising to execute pro note but not doing so—No evidence that he authorized anyone to affix his mark—His liability under pro note—Pro note purporting to be jointly executed by A and B in renewal of old joint pro note—A alone executing it—No evidence whether A executed only on faith that B would also execute—Note, if binding on A.

Where there is no evidence that a party to a promissory note authorized anyone to affix his mark and all that is in evidence is that he promised to execute the note and went away without doing so there was no execution either by him or by a person authorized to execute on his behalf. He is not, therefore, liable under the promissory note.

When A executes a bond on the faith that B will also execute it and that B fails to do so, A has an equity in his favour relieving him from a liability which he never intended to undertake. But it is also settled that if A signed the bond without any regard to the question whether B signed it or not and if he delivered it as his bond, he is liable thereon, even though B did not sign. The question whether a particular instrument was signed by one of the parties on the faith, that the other would also sign is a question of fact and or is a ground of defence which must be established by the person who has signed the instrument.

When there is a promissory note purporting to be a joint promissory note of A and B, in renewal of previous joint promissory note and A alone executes and delivers that note and B fails to execute it, the note is binding on A, when there is no evidence one way or the other whether or not A executed only on the faith that B would also execute. Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 4, 53—Question relating to fictitious character of transfer not falling under s. 53—If can be tried under s. 4—Held that gift made by insolvent in favour of his son and nephew was not fictitious and could not be annulled under s. 4.

It is open to an Insolvency Court to try a question under s. 4 of the Prov. Insol. Act relating to the fictitious character of the transfer even though it does not fall under s. 53 of the Act the petition having been made by the creditor more than four years after the transfer.

Provincial Insolvency Act—concl.

A donor who was subsequently adjudicated insolvent had made a gift of his property to his minor son and nephew. The mutation of names was effected in favour of the donees in respect of the property gifted. No khevat stood in the name of donor after the date of the gift and donor no longer retained possession over the gifted property. The amount of indebtedness admitted by the insolvent did not show that the insolvent was under any pressure from his creditors which led him to make the gift in question. It had not been shown that any of the debts was a decretal debt or that there was any execution of decree pending against the insolvent.

Held, that in the circumstances of the case there was no evidence whatsoever to show that the deed of gift was a fictitious or colourable transaction which was not intended to take effect. Therefore, the insolvent had no interest in the property gifted and the gift could not be annulled under s. 4. AVADH RAJ SINGH v. MANGREY Oudh 600

The Collector has no jurisdiction to decide such objections. The executing Court, however, has no jurisdiction to deal with objections under s. 9 regarding the attachability of the land after it has actually been alienated by the Collector in full satisfaction of the decree.

When a special jurisdiction is conferred it must be taken as strictly limited to the terms in which it is created and cannot be extended to cover matters to which no express reference has been made or which do not have to be decided in order to carry out the purpose for which the special jurisdiction has been created. Punjab Restitution of Mortgaged Lands Act (IV of 1938), ss. 2, 3, 7 and 12—Determination of validity of Act—Pith and substance—Subject-matter of Act falls within Sch. VII, Provincial Legislative List, item No. 21, Government of India Act, 1935, (25 & 26 Geo. V, Ch. 42) and is intra vires of Provincial Legislature.

The test for determining the scope and validity of legislation is to ascertain the true nature and character of the enactment, that is to say its "pith and substance." The "pith and substance" of the Punjab Restitution of Mortgaged Lands Act (IV of 1938), is to empower the Collector to extinguish subsisting mortgages effected before June 8, 1901, subject to the condition of payment of compensation in certain cases. The subject-matter of that Act falls within the expression in item No. 21, "land, that is to say rights in or over land" and consequently the restriction on the jurisdiction and powers of Civil Court, provided by s. 12 of that Act, is also within the authority of the Provincial Legislature. For the same reasons, the impugned Act cannot be said to conflict with the Contract Act in so far as it deals with land other than agricultural.

The mere fact that the subject-matter of the impugned Act may also be affected by certain provisions in the Current Legislative List, would not attract the provisions of s. 107, regarding repugnancy. Consequently the Punjab Restitution of Mortgaged Lands Act, is intra vires of the Provincial Legislature. MEH RAJ v. ALLAH RAKHIA Lah. 413 F B Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 72—Risk note form H—"Misconduct", meaning of—Duty of Court Railway held not guilty of misconduct.

The word "misconduct" in risk note Form H means "improper conduct." The Court has in cases of this sort to consider all the facts and circumstances and then arrive at a conclusion as to whether the conduct of the railway employees was such as to render the railway administration liable in damages upon a reasonable view of the matter. If it is established that the employees of the railway administration, in defiance of the ordinary practice, placed tins of molasses in the wagon which contained the plaintiff's yarn consignment or alternatively, if they placed the plaintiff's consignment in a wagon which contained tins of molasses, it must be held that they acted recklessly, knowing that contamination and damage would be a likely and probable result, and that by their conduct they showed themselves to be indifferent to such results. Where, however, the plaintiff has merely proved that the packages were received in good condition at the station from which they were despatched and that they were found to be damaged by molasses on arrival at the destination, the railway cannot be held to be guilty of misconduct in the absence of proof that they placed tins of molasses in the wagon containing the plaintiff's yarn consignment. *WAJID ALI MOHAMMAD RAFIQ v. A contract to sell some liquor out of a big cask containing much large quantity, the required quantity not being separated or bottled, would not be a contract of sale of specific goods within the meaning of s. 21, Sale of Goods Act. The expression ‘specific goods’ necessarily means goods capable of being ascertained with certainty—certum est quod certum reddi potest. A sale of some specified quantity of liquor out of a storehouse of cask would not be capable of ascertainment until it was removed or separated. The words ‘specific goods’ would according to their natural interpretation mean goods whose delivery can be demanded in specie. A contract of sale of a small quantity of liquor stored in bulk could more properly be regarded as a contract for sale of unascertained goods. Tort—concl.

The question of the good faith or the bad faith of the public officer either as regards his belief in the legality or propriety of his act or the limit of his powers or the existence of facts justifying the exercise of such powers is irrelevant in the consideration of the question whether the officer is entitled to notice under s. 80 of the Civil P. C. The section does not require that the act should have been done in good faith; it merely requires that it should purport to be done by the officer in his official capacity. If the act was one such as is ordinarily done by the officer in the course of his official duties, and he considered himself to be acting as a public officer and desired other persons to consider that he was so acting, the act clearly purports to be done in his official capacity within the ordinary meaning of the term 'purport'. The motives with which the act was done do not enter into the question at all.

The plaintiff brought a suit for damages for malicious prosecution against a number of defendants out of whom defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were Police Officers. The act on which the plaintiff rested his cause of action against the Police Officers was that they arrested the plaintiff and led him to the Police Station as a person accused of theft:

Held, that it was a Police Officer that defendants Nos. 4 and 5 took the plaintiff to the Police Station and although there may be a discrepancy as to whether one of them was in uniform or not that was an irrelevant matter because it was known to all parties concerned that they were Police Officers and it was perfectly clear that they purported to act as such whether in good or bad faith. Thus it was essential that notice under s. 80, Civil P. C., should be served on these defendants before instituting the suit:

Held, further that the bar of s. 80, Civil P. C., applied to the suit as a whole and not only to the claim for relief against those two defendants. The suit was, therefore, unsustainable in limine. NOOR MOHAMMAD v. ABDUL FATEH. Pat. 263

In execution an objection was raised by the wife of the judgment-debtor that the property attached belonged to her by reason of a sale deed executed by her husband in her favour. The objection was allowed. The decree-holder thereupon instituted a suit under s. 53, T. P. Act for cancellation of the sale-deed on the ground that it was executed with intent to defeat and delay creditors. The defendant's objection that the suit was incompetent for want of permission of the Court under O. I, r. 8, Civil P. C., was put in issue and disallowed. In appeal by the defendant the plaintiff sought to amend the plaint and turn the suit into a representative one :

Held, that the suit fell within the purview of s. 53, T. P. Act and, therefore, for want of Court's permission under O. I, r. 8, Civil P. C., was incompetent and that the provisions of O. XXI, r. 63, were not incompatible with s. 53, T. P. Act.

Held, further that having gone to the trial on issue of competency of suit it was far too late for the plaintiff to ask for leave to amend. It would be opposed to principle and accepted authority to allow the amendment. The course which the plaintiff should have adopted when the question was raised was to apply to the Court for permission to sue on behalf of all creditors. *MADINA BIBI SAHIBA v. The case set up by the plaintiff in the plaint as regards the fictitious character of the deed of gift and the other deeds is entirely different from the scope of a suit under s. 53 of the T. P. Act, where the plaintiff has to accept the genuineness of the deed as an initial fact and has to prove that the transfer, though genuine, was made with a view to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor. The primary object of an action under s. 53 of the T. P. Act, is to make the assets of the transferor available to the general body of creditors. If it would, then the action would in substance be an action under s. 53 of the T. P. Act and would have to be instituted by, or on behalf of, all the creditors. If it would not, then the action cannot be regarded as an action under s. 53 of the T. P. Act. The proper test to apply when a question of this nature is raised is to see whether if the plaintiffs succeed in the action, the property claimed in the action would be available to the general body of creditors. Where the plaintiff bases his suit upon the fictitious nature of a transfer and wants only to vindicate his individual and personal rights, it is not a suit under s. 53 and need not be in the form of a representative suit on behalf of, or for the benefit of, all the creditors. *FAQIR BUX v. s. 54—Mortgagor entering into contract with third person to sell property before mortgaging it but sale completed after mortgage—Mortgagee, when entitled to precedence over purchaser.

An agreement of sale gives the purchaser an equitable title as owner in the property concerned. But ordinarily, this is good only against the vendor himself, and does not operate against a person who obtains a legal interest in the same property in good faith without notice of the equitable title. Hence where the mortgagor enters into an agreement with a third person to sell property before mortgaging that property and the sale is completed after the mortgage, the mortgagee is entitled to precedence over the purchaser, if he had acted in good faith and had no notice of the agreement of sale. *JALAL-UD-DIN v. s. 58—Mortgage or sale—Deed, construction of—Test—Intention of parties—Surrounding circumstances, if can be considered—Unnecessary details in deed as to rights and liabilities of vendee—Emphasis on vendee being representative of vendor—Inadequacy of price—Period of 15 years given for re-purchase at exact sale price—Parties Muhammadans—These factors show that transaction was mortgage and not sale.

The question whether the sale-deed and "ikrarnama" executed on the same day record an out and out sale with a contract or condition for repurchase or they record a transaction of mortgage is in the first instance one of construction of the deed, but the Court is entitled to take it to consideration a certain number of surrounding circumstances, as for example, the circumstances in which the document was executed, the price at which the sale was concluded, the existence or non-existence of bargaining and the like. The crucial test is the intention of the parties.

• The test whether the document or documents create the relationship of creditor and debtor, is not a very satisfactory one. It would be difficult to say that even a mortgage by conditional sale creates a "debt", since such a mortgage creates in the mortgagee no right to realise the consideration of the mortgage either as a personal liability or as a liability under the mortgage.

Transfer of Property Act—contd.

Reference to unnecessary details of the rights and liabilities of the vendee in the deed, the emphasis on the transferee being a representative of the vendor, the inadequacy of price and the vendor's not gaining any particular advantage by entering into a transaction of sale, go to show that the transaction was not a sale.

Where the parties to the transaction are Muhammadans, there is some amount of presumption in favour of the transaction being a mortgage concealed under the cloak of a sale-deed with a contemporaneous contract for resale.

Where a period as long as 15 years is given for repurchase at the exact sale price, the probabilities are in favour of mortgage rather than sale. A period of 15 years is a long period within which there may be considerable rise or fall in the value of the property.

— s. 92—A getting tagai loan of Rs. 1,000 from Government under Land Improvement Loans Act and making it charge on land No. 1, and offering lands Nos. 2, 3 and 4, as collateral security—A subsequently mortgaging lands Nos. 2 and 3 to B and selling lands Nos. 1 and 4 to P and leaving Rs. 1,000 with him for paying off Government loan—Few days before aforesaid sale C attaching land No. 1 in execution of his decree and purchasing it at execution sale—Suit by P claiming charge over lands Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and recovery of amount paid by him to Government from A, B and C—Neither s. 92, Transfer of Property Act nor s. 69, Contract Act (IX of 1872), held applied—P held not entitled to reliefs claimed—Proper remedy was by suit for damages against A.

One A obtained from Govt. under Land Improvement Loans Act in 1927 a sum of Rs. 1,000 as tagai loan. It was made a charge on his land No. 1 for the improvement of which the loan was taken. His other lands Nos. 2, 3 and 4 were offered as collateral security. In 1929 A mortgaged lands Nos. 2 and 3 to B and on January 25, 1932, sold lands Nos. 1 and 4 for Rs. 5,000 to P and kept Rs. 1,000 with P out of the purchase-money for paying off the Govt. loan. On January 21, 1932, that is four days before the sale, C attached land No. 1 in execution of his money decree and purchased it himself at the execution sale. In 1935 P filed a suit claiming that he was entitled to a charge on lands Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and to recover the amount paid by him to Govt. from A, B and C:

Held, (1) that if P came within the terms of s. 92 he would have the same rights as Govt. not only against A who borrowed the money from Govt. but also against B and C who derived their rights from A. But P did not fall under s. 92 as there was in fact no mortgage to Govt. but only a statutory charge under Land Improvement Loans Act, on the lands:

(2) that part of the consideration for sale of land No. 1 retained by P for the discharge of Govt. loan must be regarded as the money of A and therefore P was not entitled to subrogation under para. 1 of s. 92. Nor could P come under para. 3, because there was no registered agreement giving him the right of subrogation;

(3) that the same reasoning which ruled out s. 92, T. P. Act, rendered s. 69, Contract Act, also inapplicable. If the repayment of the tagai loan to Govt. was to be regarded as the act of the vendor, A and not the act of P, the purchaser P, obviously did not come within the terms of s. 69. Moreover, even if it were possible to say that there was a payment by P within the meaning of s. 69, it was a payment which he was bound to make under the terms of his agreement with A and it would not, therefore, be open to him to say that it was a payment which some other person was bound to make;

(4) that P's suit was misconceived and that his only legal remedy was to sue A his vendor, for damages. VITHALDAS BHAGWANDAS DARBAR V. TUKARM VITHOBA KSHATRI Bom. 632

The principle of subrogation as it stands is now embodied in s. 92, T. P. Act, and must be applied in the Punjab on the lines indicated there. Consequently where the mortgagor executes a third mortgage of his property without disclosing the second mortgage and pays off the original mortgagee from out of the consideration received from the third mortgage, the third mortgagee does not become subrogated to the rights of the original mortgagee. No question of keeping the original mortgage alive can arise inasmuch as the third mortgagee had no knowledge of the intermediary mortgage. SHAM LAL v. CHHAJU RAM Lah. 297

— s. 100—Charge created by decree, if comes under s. 100.

A charge which is created by a decree is not created by act of parties, and it cannot be said to have been created by operation of law. Such a charge does not fall under s. 100, T. P. Act, nor does the principle underlying it apply to it. GHASIRAM v. KUNDANBAI Nag. 861

— s. 100—Charge in India, whether same as charge in England—Interest in property, if should be created under Indian law—Deed held created charge.

Charge in India cannot usefully be compared with a charge, legal or equitable, in England because in India such a charge is defined by statute. What is essential is that immovable property must be made a security for the payment of money in such a way that the transaction does not amount to a mortgage in the Indian law sense. In that sense a mortgage is a transfer of an interest in specific immovable property for the purpose of securing money. Of course if the transaction falls within s. 58 it is outside s. 100. So a charge is something other than a transfer of an interest in specific immovable property. It is not a question whether there is an expression of an intention to create an interest but whether on its true construction, the document makes immovable property security for the payment of money.

One J by a document admitted liability. In respect of this liability he undertook to execute a charge bond over a specified share and rights in a village together with the sir land. He further undertook to get sanction for the transfer of sir and not to assign certain property until the above were carried out:

Held, that the only possible purpose of the last undertaking was to segregate the property so that it would be answerable in the hands of J should he fail to give the charge bond, and that made this property a security for the payment of money. Thus a charge was created by the deed. DAW BHAIROPRASAD v. JUGALPRASAD Nag. 761

Trusts Act (II of 1882), s. 94—“Beneficial interest,” scope of—Non-mortgaging co-parcener is saddled with obligation in nature of trust, and must hold property to benefit of mortgagee to extent necessary to satisfy his demand.

The term “beneficial interest” as used in s. 94, Trusts Act should not be given any restricted or technical meaning. The sum total of the interests of a beneficial owner contains among other things freedom from encumbrances. If the property is encumbered, then there is something missing from the whole beneficial interest, namely the interest which the mortgagees have acquired. In that sense the mortgagees can be regarded as having in them a fraction of the whole beneficial interest. As against their mortgagors this makes no difference for they have there in addition the legal interest into which the lesser equitable interest merges. But if for some reason they are unable to avail themselves of the legal interest, there is no reason why they should also be cut off from the equitable beneficial interest. Consequently where an undivided co-parcener has mortgaged his share and on partition the property is allowed to non-mortgaging co-parcener who undertakes to pay off the mortgage he is saddled with an obligation in the nature of a trust and is bound to hold the property for the benefit of the mortgagees to the extent necessary to satisfy their demands. *ATMARAMSAO v. Receipt, drawn up on a printed form showing that the defendant had received Rs. 150 from the plaintiff in consideration of a promissory note which he had executed in his favour, furnishes evidence of the loan taken by the defendant from the plaintiff. Section 39 does not prescribe any particular form of a written document to evidence the loan. The words "written document" used in the section are wide enough to cover any writing which would unmistakably show that a loan was taken by the debtor, and no particular form of writing is necessary to evidence the transaction of the loan. The intention of the section is that loans taken by agriculturists shall be evidence by a writing and should not be made dependent upon parole testimony. It is only to guard against an oral or parole transaction of loan that the section insists that the transaction shall be evidence by a document. BRIJ LAL v. SURAJMAN

Hereafter both H and I filed a suit for a declaration that the decree for sale obtained by U was not binding on H and was not enforceable against his properties, as H was not represented by a duly appointed guardian, in the suit filed by U. This suit was ultimately decreed and, as a result of the decree passed in the suit, the original suit filed by U was reopened so far as H was concerned. I was also impleaded as a defendant in U's suit when that suit was reopened against H. The suit was again decreed against H and a preliminary decree under O. XXXIV, r. 4, Civil P. C., was passed. Though in this preliminary decree I's name figured as one of the defendants, the decree was solely against H and there was no liability cast on I by that decree. The decree was made final in due course. But in the final decree the name of I did not appear as a judgment-debtor and the decree was only against H. After the passing of the final decree, I filed an application under s. 4, Encum. Estates Act and sought to invoke the provisions of s. 7 (1) (a):

Where it is provided by the U. P. Stay of Proceedings (Revenue Courts) Act that all suits shall be stayed, all such suits are stayed automatically, and no order of the Court is necessary. Where, therefore, a suit or an appeal is liable to be stayed under the Stay of Proceedings Act 1937, it is liable to be dismissed under s. 3 of the Stayed Arrears of Rent (Remission) Act, 1939, even if no stay order has been passed under s. 2 of the former Act. *HARI SARAN DAS v. Section 3 of the U. P. Stayed Arrears of Rent (Remission) Act operates to dismiss all suits for arrears of rent stayed under Act IV of 1937, or which if instituted, would have been stayed that is to say all suits for arrears of rent prior to Rabi 1344 F. It also operates to dismiss all applications for the recovery of arrears of rent that is, so far as the Oudh Rent Act is concerned, all applications for execution of decrees for arrears of rent already instituted or which might have been instituted relating to the same instalments prior to the instalments for Rabi 1344 F. Will—Construction—Hindu testator having two widows and no children, bringing up R, a daughter of his wife's brother as his own daughter—Property devised in favour of one of widows, providing that after her death property should go to his two brothers and R in equal shares—No restriction placed on R's power of alienation—Will held gave absolute estate to R.

P a deceased Hindu had two widows but no children. R the daughter of a brother of one of the widows, was brought up from her infancy with P as if she were his own daughter. Before his death, P had executed a will. By the will he devised all the properties to his junior wife. She was directed to give one of the houses to the senior wife for residence for her life and also a monthly maintenance allowance of Rs. 10. The rest of the income, the junior wife was allowed to use in any way she liked. As regards the corpus of the estate, she was prohibited from selling it, except certain unproductive properties which she could sell with the consent of his brothers. After her death the whole property was to be divided in three equal shares two to his two brothers and one to R. There was no restriction on R's power of alienation. On the contrary she was treated on the same footing as the testator's brothers: Held, that the intention of P was to confer an absolute estate on R. GURAN DITTA MAL v. RAM RAKHI Lah. 742

Construction—Principles—Intention of testator—Garden in compound of building is presumed to be for the benefit of all the occupants of the building in the absence of words allocating it to occupant's of particular floor.

The Court has no power to give effect to a hypothetical intention by supplying lacunae in the will and thereby making a new will for the testator. The Court cannot speculate as to what the testator may suppose to have intended to write. The only intentions of the testator which the Court can carry out are intentions either expressly or impliedly expressed in the will. No indication of intention is sufficient to induce the Court to hold that a certain bequest has been made, unless, as a matter of fact, the bequest is made either expressly or by necessary implication in the will. Necessary implication does not mean natural necessity but so strong a possibility of intention that a contrary intention cannot be supposed.

The natural presumption is that a garden in the compound of a building is intended for the benefit of all the occupants of the building unless there are words allocating the whole of it to the occupants of some particular floor. Where there are no such words in the will the Courts are entitled to infer that the garden appertains to the whole building. LOKE NATH MUKERJEE v. ABANI NATH MUKERJEE Cal. 874

Construction—"Satyadhikari Oh Dokholikar" and "Satyaban Oh Dokholikar Purusannukromah", meaning of—Principles of construction.

Where a clause or a word in a will is susceptible of two meanings it must be interpreted according to that sense to which the law will give effect.

According to a will by a Hindu the testator's grandson R was to become with previous arrangement (made in some previous will) 'Shatyadhikari Oh Dokholikar' (of the disputed property). If at the time of his death he were to leave no male child then R's uterine brother S and on his death his eldest son was to become 'Shatyaban Oh Dokholikar Purusannukromah.' If two aforesaid grandsons and or any male child of their family bangsha be not in existence then the testator's existing son P or his eldest son was to become 'Satyaban Oh Dokholikar' none of the testator's heirs was given power to transfer.

Held, that the words "Shatyadhikari Oh Dokholikar" were not used to convey all the interest possessed by the testator. He must have used the word to confer some interest which was less than his own interest. The estate was given to R simply without express words of inheritance. It would in the absence of a conflicting context carry by Hindu Law an estate of inheritance. The estate given to R was therefore was not an English estate tail male.

Held, also that the word "purusannukromah" meant "generation after generation." S therefore got an estate of general inheritance and the prohibition against alienation of this estate was void in law. ABANI NATH MUKHOPADHAYA v. AMAR NATH MUKHOPADHAYA Cal. 448

ON DEBT.

[By Phani Bhushan Sinha, B. L. Pleader, Gaya.]

Debt as a legal phenomenon presents us an interesting history. It has engaged my special attention as it offers us fresh field with golden harvest to provide our mind with ample materials for new enquiries and researches. It reveals to our mind various strata of legal epochs as excavation divulges to us various strata of historical epochs. Let us now go deep into the legal history and investigate by scientific study into the origin of debt and its successive stages of development. The idea of debt originated in human minds from some form of belief that Gods take active interest in human affairs. They do good to men and thereby put them in debt which men are morally bound to re-pay in some form or other. The oldest literature of ancient India, Greece and Rome and their respective laws are bound up with the same belief. The Vedas and the Upanishads, the oldest literature of the ancient Indo Aryans which demand from the students of research the most respectful attention on account of its remote antiquity shed new light on this point. The Rigvedic gods Indra (God of thunder), Usa (God of dawn) Surja (God of Sun), Varuna (God of Wind) and other Gods are always doing good to men and putting them in debt which is being re-paid by them by means of prayer or sacrifices.

It is very interesting to quote the following hymn of the Rigveda addressed to the God-Indra (God of Thunder) for illustration.

"Worship God Indra (God of Thunder). He is the best of all friends (as he gives us son and wealth) and he protects us and knows us all."
(Rigveda Book 1).

Now let us turn to the Upanishad which is supplementary to the Vedas and which gives us the exact word "Rina" that corresponds to the English word "debt." The Taitriya Upanishada says that a Brahmin at the very moment of his birth becomes involved in three kinds of debts (1) Debt to the sages (2) Debt to the Gods (3) Debt to the mains. The first is discharged by the learning of the Vedas, the second is discharged by the performance of sacrifices, the third is discharged by the procreation of children. The word debt here connotes the idea of moral duty to re-pay. The sages, the Gods, the mains gave the Brahmins blissful life, hence they are morally bound to discharge the debt in the ways referred to. It is also interesting to note that the great sage Manu also referred to these debts in his code Chap. IV Verse No. 257 which says.

"When he (Brahmin) has paid according to law, his debts to the great sages, to the mains and to the Gods, let him make over everything to his son and dwell (in his house) not caring for worldly concern."

(Sacred Book of the East-Manu-Maxmuller's edition.)

The ancient literature of Greece and Rome furnishes us similar facts that ancient Greeks and Romans were under the belief that they were indebted to Gods for the benefits given to them and were morally bound to discharge the debt by means of prayer and sacrifices. The Greek God Appollo was worshipped for giving light and joy. The cock was specially sacrificed to the Greek God Asclepius (God of Storm) for averting stormy wind. It is interesting to refer to the last words* of the great philosopher Socrates addressed to Orito his disciple "Orito, we owe a cock to Asclepius, discharge the debt and by no means omit it." These words clearly refer to the moral obligation of Socrates to discharge the debt to Asclepius (God of *Ancient history of Vincent Smith.

Storm) who took away his stormy life and freed him from the worldly bondage. This shows that even the great philosopher Socrates was not free from the old idea that men are morally bound to re-pay the debt to Gods by means of prayer and sacrifices.

Similar was the belief of the ancient Romans that they owed to Gods who gave them blessing, victory, love and beauty and they were morally bound to discharge the debt by offering homage and worship to their divine creditors. Jupiter, the mightiest deity was worshipped by the ancient Romans in His famous temple at Elis and the white animals were sacrificed to him for his giving benefit and blessing to the Roman citizen. The Venus, the Goddess of love and beauty was offered myrtle, rose and apple because she gave beauty and progeny. The Mars (God of War) was worshipped as he gave, victory in War. These facts can be said to be mythological but by the science of mythology we can get the history, philosophy, law and religion of ancient nations. These facts bring to light one important secret that primary source or of the idea of debt was the receipt of benefit from Gods which carried with it the idea of moral duty to repay. The idea of receiving benefit from Gods and the corresponding idea of returning the same gave rise to a new form of moral idea in the course of social evolution that every man is morally bound to return the benefit received from his fellowmen and thus arose in the human society the idea of human debtor and creditor. That every human debtor was morally bound to return the thing received was the law set up by the Gods and in violation of which the debtor was punishable by the ancient society. The ancient people knew no distinction between moral obligation and legal obligation, moral law (Jus) and juristic law (jus civile).

The obligation which was moral to them was also legal to them and was enforceable by their crude and undeveloped state. With the gradual development of the idea of state the moral obligation attached to debt was transformed into a legal obligation enforceable by the King. Thus we find that the debt involved two elements in the second stage of its evolution. (1) Receipt of the thing; (2) legal duty to return the same and hence it was enforceable on the ground of a delivery of property. The modern idea of debt as a contractual obligation is the latest juridical phenomenon unknown to ancient people. Street, one of the greatest jurists of England makes the following observation which is worth quoting for illustration.

"Early real contract or simple debt was directly founded on legal duty and does not derive its obligatory force from any word or promise of either party".

This observation is applicable to all ancient systems of law such as ancient Hindu Law, classical Roman Law and other continental laws such as English, German, French and Muhammadan Law of the past. In ancient Hindu Law "Rina" and in the classical Roman Law, Mutuum and commodatum were the earliest forms of debt founded upon a delivery of a thing giving rise to a legal liability to repay.

The early German, English and French Laws being child of ancient Roman Law adopted the Roman idea of Mutuum and commodatum in toto. The ancient Muhammadan Law was also much influenced by the Roman classifications of debt as aforesaid.

The "karz" or "Arreeut" of the ancient Muhammadan Law corresponded with the Mutuum and the commodatum of the ancient Roman Law.

Thus we find practically all systems of ancient law exhibit the fundamental unity of legal idea that early debt is based on legal duty to repay the thing delivered, in other words it was enforceable on the ground of a delivery of property.

Let us now look to the third stage which brings to our mind the idea of debt as a contractual obligation. Such an idea is of comparatively recent origin in the history of legal institution as pointed out by Sir Henry Maine in his book on "Ancient Law" and originated at the time when the idea of contract had come into existence and respect for contractual obligation began to develop. Debts, in modern law, are not founded on moral duty or legal duty but they are founded on mutual agreement which is alone sufficient to create an obligation enforceable at law. Thus we find that debt as a legal phenomenon passed through several stages of evolution in its onward march of progress. In the beginning it was a moral obligation, subsequently it became a legal obligation and finally it was changed into a contractual obligation giving up its old form and character.

SIMULTANEOUS CONVICTIONS FOR SUBSTANTIALLY THE SAME OFFENCE.

Much confusion may result, where a statute, ex majore cautela, provides against what is, or what seems to be, substantially the same offence in several different ways. Recently, in Kite v. Brown (30th October, 1940), in the Divisional Court, the Rationing Order, 1939, (S. R. & O.; 1939, No. 1856), arts. 2 and 7 (a) and (c) were considered very carefully in this connection.

Article 2 provides: "Except under the authority of the Minister or under and in accordance with the provisions of this order or any direction or licence issued thereunder, a person shall not obtain or attempt to obtain, or supply or offer or attempt to supply any rationed food for household consumption, or any rationed food for the purposes of any establishment." Article 7 provides: "Except where the Minister shall otherwise authorise, no person may obtain any rationed food for household consumption unless the following conditions are complied with: (a) A person who is the holder of a general or child's ration book shall obtain rationed food only from a retailer with whom he shall be registered in accordance with directions of the Minister . . . (c) the appropriate coupon or coupons representing the amount of food obtained must be detached and retained by the retailer and no more may be obtained on any coupon than the amount prescribed for such coupon . . ."

In the first two informations offences were charged relating to the supply of rationed food to the same person. The first charge was that she was supplied with rationed food although she was the holder of a general ration book and not registered with the appellant. The second charge related to the supply of rationed food to the same person for household consumption without a coupon. In both cases the offences charged related to the same $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. of butter.

Counsel for the appellant cited R. v. Kenny, 21 Cr. App. Rep. 78, as authority for the proposition that two informations should not be laid for what is substantially the same offence. In that case the appellant had pleaded guilty to charges of pavilion breaking and larceny and also to committing malicious damage. He was sentenced to two concurrent sentences for the pavilion breaking and larceny, and for the malicious damage respectively. Lord Hewart said: "The malicious damage in this case was an incident of the breaking in, but nevertheless the appellant was sentenced in respect of each offence as though they were distinct offences. . . . It is obvious that there should not be concurrent sentences for two aspects of the same matter. . . ." The court accordingly quashed the conviction for malicious damage, and substituted a smaller sentence for that in respect of the pavilion breaking and larceny.

Viscount Caldecote, L. O. J., rightly pointed out an unsatisfactory feature of the report of this case in that, although the appeal was stated to be against the sentences, the court was said to have quashed one of the convictions. He stated, apparently on this ground, that he was unable to derive any assistance from that case. He said that he had, however, come to the clear conclusion that there were in Kite v. Brown two definite offences, one of which was possibly more serious than the other. That objection therefore failed.

With regard to the report of R. v. Kenny, 21 Cr. App. Rep. 78, if in fact the appeals were against sentence, it might well be a relevant consideration in mitigation of the sentence that substantially only one offence had been committed, and that the defendant should not be punished as if he had committed two offences. It is fairly clear from the remarks of the Lord Chief Justice in that case, that whether the appeals were against convictions and sentences or merely against sentences, the learned judge in making his general pronouncement deplored the duplication of sentences and not the duplication of convictions for what amounted to two aspects of the same matter. It would indeed be surprising if the actual decision went further than that, although if after conviction or acquittal on one charge a defendant were tried on a different charge which was in respect of substantially the same offence, he might then be entitled to an acquittal. The offences would, however, have to be as nearly identical possible (Bannister v. Clarke, 26 Cox. 641), as the ground of a successful plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit is that "it is an established rule of the common law that a man may not be put twice in peril for the same offence" (2 Hawk. c. 35). Simultaneous convictions on two charges involving substantially the same offence could hardly, it is submitted, be bad on this ground.

In this connection, however, it should always be borne in mind that under s. 33 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, "where an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more Acts, or both under an Act and at common law. . . the offender shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of those Acts or at common law, but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence."

In Kite v. Brown a further objection was raised with regard to another pair of informations against the same defendant, that they were bad for duplicity. They were similar offences to those charged in the first informations, but in this case the informations particularised $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. of butter and $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. of bacon in each case. Viscount Caldecote, L. C. J., said that the fact that two different articles of rationed food were stated to have been supplied in no wise made the informations bad for duplicity. A case to which he had been referred (R. v. Hammick (1918), 87 L. J. K. B. 846) was under a very different order, and did not affect his opinion. He therefore held, and the rest of the court agreed, that the convictions were good.

In R. v. Hammick, supra, the defendant was convicted for that he on or between 9th April, 1917, and 22nd November, 1917, did unlawfully acquire various articles of food, to wit sugar and flour, so that the quantity in his possession at any one time exceeded the quantity ordinarily required for use and consumption in his household, contrary to the Food Hoarding Order, 1917, art. 1. This conviction was held to be bad for duplicity, and the ground of the decision was that the article created a separate offence in respect of each separate article of food hoarded. This is not so in the Rationing Order, 1939, arts. 2 and 7, which refer generally to "rationed food" and not to particular items of such food.

There is a danger of an information or indictment being bad for duplicity wherever a statute describes the same offence in different or alternative ways. In R. v. Young at the London Sessions on 30th September, 1937 (unreported, but see 81 Sol. J. 832), a count charging a defendant with driving a motor vehicle on a road when under the influence of drink or a drug to such an extent as to be incapable having proper control of the vehicle contrary to s. 15 of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, was held to be good. On the other hand, convictions were held to be bad for duplicity in R. v. Wilmot, 24 Cr. App. Rep. 63; R. v. Surrey J.J. [1932] 1 K. B. 450; and R. v. Disney [1933] 2 K. B. 138. There was a conviction for driving a motor-car recklessly or at a speed or in a manner which was dangerous to the public, contrary to s. 11 of the Road Traffic Act, 1930; the second was for driving a motor vehicle without due care and attention or without reasonable consideration for other person using the road, contrary to s. 12 (1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1930, and the third was for unlawfully taking or destroying game or rabbits in or being on certain land by night with a gun, net or other instrument for the purpose of unlawfully taking or destroying game or rabbits, contrary to s. 1 of the Night Poaching Act, 1848.

In the last case the Lord Chief Justice said that it was impossible to say of what the appellant had been convicted. In Kite v. Brown there was no such uncertainty, but the fact that such a defence could be raised illustrates the extreme care which must be taken in framing indictments and informations where a statute is more than usually verbose.—S. J.

ASSISTING THE POLICE

At page 780 of volume 99, we had an article on this subject. We return to it in view of the present position, when we are all not only in the war in the sense that we are, soldiers and civilians alike, exposed to the hostile action of the enemy, but also each carrying an individual responsibility for the maintenance of order and decent behaviour, both when under fire and when going about our ordinary avocations.

One of the healthiest features of the British constitution is that it recognises no fundamental distinction between the classes of citizens selected for special functions, such as soldiers and policemen, and the ordinary run of men and women. Superior orders will not exonerate either a soldier or a policeman from the guilt of any unlawful action he may perform. No doubt if action taken under orders results in his arraignment before a criminal court, he will be dealt with more gently on that account, unless the action was so outrageous that no rereasonable being ought to be allowed to plead in mitigation the duty of obedience to orders. But such an argument would not be admitted as a ground for acquittal.

This steady insistence on equality before the law has more than one consequence. There is on the one hand the protection of all and sundry from violent and oppressive military or police action, but there is also a duty laid on all and sundry to assist in keeping the King's peace. This is altogether apart from the special emergency law by which we have now all placed our persons and property unreservedly at the disposal of the government for the time being, for the purpose of prosecuting a war in which we must be successful or perish.

It is our ancient Common Law which lays on each of us the duty to interfere to prevent riot, gives us the power to arrest for felony, compels us under pain of punishment to assist a policeman in the execution of his duty when called upon to do so.

One man or woman can do little to help in suppressing a riot of any gravity, though there have been instances where a person of force of character, acting promptly and before the trouble has gone very far, has quelled an outbreak of disorder. But usually, organisation and direction are essential to success in dealing with a mob.

Riot is rare in England, and in modern times there is nearly always readily available sufficient organised force to deal with riot if it arose. The great reinforcement of the police by the special constabulary, and of the military by the Home Guard, ensures that any trouble of this kind promoted by the treacherous fools, fortunately few in this country and probably now all safely under lock and key, who have a queer hankering for the new order whose prophet is Hitler, and whose essence is the tyrannous domination of one race over all others, is very unlikely to arise. But the fact remains that if on any occasion the organised forces need assistance in dealing with riot, every man of us, special constables, home guards and the un-uniformed man alike must help according to his strength. In the past it was tacitly assumed that the citizen's duty to uphold the King's peace lay upon male citizens alone. There can be no doubt that women, with the franchise and with all legal disqualification for office of all kinds formally removed, have exactly the same duty in this regard as men. To do them justice, few of them shrink from this position. Indeed, long before the emancipation of women some of the boldest and most determined helpers of policemen in trouble were those in petticoats, and the athletic young women of nowadays are not likely to be less forthcoming in this respect than their grandmothers.

When a policeman calls upon a bystander to help, that bystander must respond if it is not physically impossible to do so. An elderly man or woman with a weak heart or rheumatic legs, would meet with no punishment or even reproach for non-fulfilment of this public duty. But the physically fit are in danger not only of being regarded as morally weak and miserable; one of them might find himself in the dock indicted for a common law misdemeanor. This is not mere ancient thunder. In the article referred to above, an instance is cited of one such indictment at the Wiltshire Quarter Sessions for October 1935. A policeman was struggling with a prisoner who had been engaged in a fight. The constable called on the accused by name to assist him, but the accused not only sought excuse for doing nothing, but took on himself to say, "You can't arrest him." Later he added, "Why call me when there are plenty of others about?", an argument equally available to every man jack of those present, and if adopted, resulting in no assistance being given at all. A fine of five pounds was thought sufficient to meet this case, but a common law misdemeanor will carry imprisonment as well as a pecuniary penalty.

The leading case on Assisting the Police is R. v. Brown (1841), Car. and M. 314; 174 E. R. 522. In that case, Mr. Baron Alderson laid down as requisite to support an indictment for refusal to assist the police: the constable must see a breach of the peace being committed, there must be a reasonable necessity for calling for assistance, and a refusal without physical impossibility or lawful excuse, to render the assistance called for.

"Whether the aid of the defendant, if given would have proved sufficient or useful, is not the question or the criterion. Every man might make that excuse and say that his individual aid would have done no good."

"Constable" will of course, include special constable. As we have repeatedly pointed out, a special constable on duty is as fully a constable as any member of a police force; it is not necessary to travel again over that piece of ground.

There are other decided cases in point. Glamorgan County Council v. Glasbrook (1924) 88 J. P. 111, citing R. v. Brown, supra, recognised the citizens' duty "to aid and assist a constable in the preservation of order." For a form of indictment held good and sufficient, see R. v. Sherlock (1866), 30 J. P. 8.

The law protects the citizen who assists a constable as it protects the constable himself, see R. v. Porter (1873), 12 Cox 444.

The protection may not be very effective when a violent prisoner is going "all out" to defeat his captors, and it is perhaps small comfort to the upholder of the law that, if he is killed his assailant will probably be hanged. But he is a poor citizen who, in a critical moment, stops to regard his own skin, and certainly every case of severe punishment for violence to a constable or his lawful assistant, tends to deterrence.—J. P.

RETROSPECTIVE EFFECT OF PENALTY SECTIONS

If a statutory enactment increases or decreases the term of imprisonment or the amount of the fine which may be inflicted for an existing statutory offence, is the new enactment retrospective so that a person who committed an offence before the passing of the amending legislation becomes subject to the new penalties, or does the new section apply only to offences committed after its passing?

One general principle as to the retrospective effect of legislation is thus laid down in Halsbury's "Laws of England," second edition, volume 31, at p. 513. "A statute is prima facie prospective and does not interfere with existing rights unless it contains express words, or there is the plainest implication to that effect. The fact of a statute being remedial, or designed to protect the public interest, is a matter to which great weight is to be attached and a different principle prevails where the statute is one that introduces a new remedy." But there are cases in which it may be argued that amending legislation must affect acts already done, and that penalties must be imposed under the new Act. This may be clear from the language of a section. Section 53 (1) of the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933, reads as follows: "Sentence of death shall not be pronounced on or recorded against a person under the age of eighteen years, but in lieu thereof the court shall sentence him to be detained during His Majesty's pleasure, and, if so sentenced, he shall, notwithstanding anything in the other provisions of this Act, be liable to be detained in such place and under such conditions as the Secretary of State may direct." This would have prevented the passing of a death sentence upon a person who committed murder before the passing of that statute, and who might have been liable to the death sentence had it not been passed, provided he was under the age of eighteen years at the time of the trial.

We know of no case in which the point as to the retrospective effect of penalties has been decided, though it may be supposed it must often have arisen. At the present time, it may often arise, for there are several instances where under the Defence Regulations terms of imprisonment or penal servitude or the maximum amount of fines have been increased by amending regulations.

There are many authorities bearing more or less upon the question, a few of which may now be noted. In R. v. Cator, (1767), 4 Burr 2026: 98 E. R. 56, Lord Mansfield, C. J., was dealing with the enticement of artificers into foreign service, for which the penalty under a statute, 5 G. I. c. 27, was £100 and three months' imprisonment, but under a later statute, 23 G. II, c. 13, was £500 and twelve months' imprisonment. He observed: "The latter Act seems to be a repeal of the former: it was made to supply the deficiencies of the former." It would seem to follow from this judgment that the penalty section was regarded as retrospective, since if the earlier statute was repealed by the later, the later would govern the whole proceedings and the penalty, no penalty under a repealed statute being possible.

Maxwell, on "The Interpretation of Statutes," p. 162 says: "Where a statute alters the quality and incidents of an offence, as by making that which was a felony merely a misdemeanour, it would be construed as impliedly repealing the old law. Thus, 16 Geo. III, c. 30, which imposed a pecuniary penalty merely on persons who hunted or killed deer with their faces blackened, was held to have repealed so much of the "Black" Act (9 Geo. I. c. 22) as made that offence capital.

Again, he says, "where the punishment or penalty is altered in degree but not in kind, the later provision would be considered as superseding the earlier one," and quotes Henderson v. Sherborne, (1837), 2 M. & W. 236, 150 E. R., p. 743. In that case, Lord Abinger, C. J., said "The principle adopted by Lord Tenterden, that a penal law ought to be construed strictly, is not only a sound one, but the only one consistent with our free institutions. The interpretation of statutes has always, in modern times, been highly favourable to the personal liberty of the subject, and I hope will always remain so. But I think there is another ground for not disturbing this nonsuit. If the 77th section of the new Poor Law Act embraces this case, I do not agree that it does not amount to a repeal of the former enactment."

In Re Baker (1857) 2 H. & N. 219, 157 E. R. 92, Bramwell, B. said: "When a statute directs something to be done in a certain event, and another law is made which appoints something else to be done, not contradictory, but more comprehensive and including the former, I cannot help thinking that the first Act is gone."

Here, again, there is support for the view that a penalty may be imposed under a later enactment for an act done during the existence of an earlier enactment repealed by the later.

In R. v. John Davis (1783), 1 Leach, 271, 168 E. R. 238, a statute was held to be virtually repealed by a latter one reducing the gravity of the offence, and its punishment, and although the report does not make this clear, it appears that the prisoner must have been held liable only to the lesser penalty provided in the second statute. That which applies to mitigation of punishment would logically apply to aggravation of sentence, but the law is not always so interpreted. It must always be borne in mind that where there is a doubt about the true construction of a statute of a penal nature, the doubt should be resolved in favour of the defendant.

In R. v. Chandra Dharma [1905] 2 K. B. 335, Lord Alverstone, C. J., observed: "The rule is clearly established that, apart from any special circumstances appearing on the face of the statute in question, statutes which make alterations in procedure are retrospective. It has been held that a statute shortening the time within which proceedings can be taken is retrospective, and it seems to me that it is impossible to give any good reason why a statute extending the time within which proceedings may be taken should not also be held to be retrospective. If the case could have been brought within the principle that unless the language is clear a statute ought not to be construed so as to create new disabilities or obligations, or impose new duties in respect of transactions which were complete at the time when the Act came into force, Mr. Compton-Smith would have been entitled to succeed; but when no new disability or obligation has been created by the statute, but it only alters the time within which proceedings may be taken, it may be held to apply to offences completed before the statute was passed. That is the case here." The implication is that in the absence of clear and express language to the contrary, a statute imposing new disabilities or burdens should not be held retrospective in its operation.

The case of In Re School Board Election for the Parish of Pulborough (1891) 1 Q. B. D. 725, dealt with certain disqualifications attached to bankruptcy under the Act of 1883. It was there held that the disqualifications were not retrospective, and did not apply to a person made a bankrupt before the passing of the Act. Davey, L. J., in the course of his judgment said: "The question therefore seems to me to turn on the proper construction to be put on the words 'Where a man is adjudged bankrupt' at the commencement of s. 32 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. Now, reading those words alone, and apart from considerations arising out of the subject-matter of the section in which they occur, I should certainly understand them (according to the ordinary use of the English language) to mean, if any man shall or may hereafter be adjudged bankrupt; and unless there be some controlling context in the Act or in the section, I hold that to be the meaning of the words. It has been suggested that the words may be read as meaning 'where a man is an adjudicated bankrupt'. The answer seems to me to be that those are not the words before us, and that the words we have to construe are grammatically different. It is a well-known principle in the construction of statutes, that where the words admit of two constructions you are not to construe them so as to produce a retrospective effect, or impose disabilities not existing at the passing of the Act."

R. v. Vine (1875), 13 Cox, C. C. 43, dealt with another kind of disqualification, namely, that of a person convicted of felony, from holding a licence to sell spirits. Here, it was held that the disqualification had a retrospective effect so as to make a licence held by a person disqualified null and void. Cockburn, C. J., said; "If it could be seen that the intention of the legislature was to aggravate the punishment of persons convicted of felony, I should feel strongly the force of Mr. Poland's argument; but the purpose of this enactment is not to punish the felon, but to protect the public from having houses of public entertainment kept by a class of persons likely to prove injurious to society." From this it would appear that the learned judge would not have held upon the words of that particular statute that if it had provided increased punishment for an offence, it would have been retrospective in operation.

From these authorities, none of which as we have said decides the particular point we are discussing, it appears that where there is any doubt upon the true construction of a statute, order, or regulation, the construction should be in favour of the defendant, and should not be such as to render him liable to increased punishment. There may, however, be cases in which the amendment of the law is such as to do away with the old provision, and replace it by a new provision from the date upon which the new provision comes into operation. Generally, where an enactment is amended, the enactment is to be read from the date upon which the amendment comes into force in its new form, and with full effect from that date. This may even involve the proposition that a person is liable to increased imprisonment or fine under the new law even though his offence was committed at a time when the maximum punishment was under the old law less severe. Only the High Court can settle the matter conclusively, and until such a decision is pronounced, it is likely that the courts will tend to resolve any doubts by refusing to impose the higher scale of punishment provided by new enactments.—J. An Offence Against a Child.

We heartily agree with the mayor of Luton, who told a mother, found guilty of shoplifting in the presence of her ten year old son, that she had committed a crime not only against the shopkeeper, but also against the boy. She was treated mercifully and bound over, though, as the magistrates said, she deserved to go to prison. Fortunately for her, people are not always dealt with by the sole test of what they deserve, and a prison sentence on the mother might have been a disaster for her family.

There is to-day a widespread and wholesome interest in juvenile delinquency, its causes and its treatment. All careful investigators find that home life is, as might be expected, one of the most important influences upon a child's character and conduct, perhaps the most important of all. It has been pointed out recently that many people, when questioned on the subject, are quite unable to say when they first learned that they must be honest, but they have a general impression that they knew about it as soon as they knew anything. This points strongly to a probability that it was at home that the first lessons were given in honesty. Even where parents are not scrupulously honest themselves, they are usually horrified at the thought that their children should know anything against them, and the spectacle of the parent allowing her small child to see his mother in the act of stealing is as sad as it is rare.—J. REVIEW.

The Law of Arbitration In India.

By S. D. SINGH, M. A. LL., B. PRIOE Rs. 5.

This is an exhaustive and critical commentary on the Arbitration Act 1940. The arrangement of the book is excellent. The principles have been lucidly expressed in the light of the latest and up-to-date Indian and English case-law, and the changes in the law have been clearly pointed out. All the intricate points arising under the provisions of the Act have been fully discussed. The appendices contain all the connected statutes repealed or co-existing as well as the English Arbitration Acts and extracts from the Civil Justice Committee Report. The book will be found very useful to the Bench as well as to the Bar.

RES IPSA LOQUITUR AND ONUS OF PROOF

The judgment of Mr. Justice Atkinson in Imperial Smelting Corporation Limited v. Joseph Constantine Steamship Line Limited (162 L. T. Rep. 267; (1940) 1 K. B. 812) affords one further example of the application of what is known as the doctrine or principle of res ipsa loquitur, and the burden of proof which is thereby cast upon the party called upon to rebut the allegation of negligence thus raised against him. This was a special case stated by an arbitrator to determine the question of liability in a claim for damages which was brought by a firm of charterers against a firm of shipowners for failure to deliver a cargo under the terms of a charter-party.

The charter-party provided for the loading by the ship in question of a cargo at a certain port, but before the time for loading had arrived the ship was damaged by an explosion the cause of which was unexplained. It was agreed between the parties that the delay caused by the damage was of such a character as to frustrate the commercial aspect of the adventure, but as regards the liability of the shipowners the main question in dispute was whether the onus lay upon them, if they sought to rely upon frustration, to prove that this was not caused by their own default, or whether it lay upon the charterers to prove default on the part of the shipowners.

Upon this main question of law judgment was given in favour of the shipowners, and, although this decision was subsequently reversed by the Court of Appeal (163 L. T. Rep. 168; (1940) 2 K. B. 430) on the ground that a party who is prima facie liable cannot escape liability under a plea of frustration unless he proves affirmatively that the cause of frustration was not brought into operation by his default, the observations of Mr. Justice Atkinson upon the application of the doctrine under discussion remain unaffected by the later decision. In his judgment, in dealing with the question as to whether or not the charterers in order to discharge the burden which, in his view, lay upon them, had in fact established negligence on the part of the shipowners, he came to the conclusion that the mere happening of the explosion was such as to raise a presumption of negligence, and he went on to consider therefore what degree of proof was thereby called for by way of rebuttal on the part of the shipowners.

Following certain earlier authorities which have dealt with the position which arises when a prima facie case of negligence is raised, he held that the onus which was thus cast upon the shipowners was one merely to give an explanation of the explosion, and that, if such explanation was equally consistent with the absence of negligence as with negligence, they had discharged this onus, with the result that the burden once more lay upon the charterers to prove negligence in fact, which, in his view, upon the facts before him they had failed to do.

This question of the degree of proof which is thus called for by way of rebuttal is one of considerable importance in that the facts which may give rise to the application of the doctrine are frequently to be found in the ordinary relationship of mankind which leads to a charge of negligence upon which a claim for damages is based, and it may well happen in such a case that no evidence of negligence is available apart from the presumption which arises from the happening of the occurrence itself. It is important, therefore, to know in what position a plaintiff may find himself in an action when he relies solely upon this presumption, and in what manner it may be rebutted by the defendant so as to lay the plaintiff under the necessity of producing affirmative evidence of negligence in support of his case. This leads to a question which is the subject of this article, and it is this: "In a case in which the facts are such as to raise a presumption of negligence, do they call for an explanation only on the part of the opposite party, or do they go further and call for proof of the absence of negligence on his part in order to amount to a rebuttal of the charge of negligence?"

As regards the onus of proof which is thus laid upon a party to rebut this presumption of negligence, the judgment which crystallises the law on this point and which has been referred to and followed in a number of subsequent cases is that of Lord Dunedin in the House of Lords in Ballard v. North British Railway Company ((1923) S. C. (H. L.) 43). This case concerned an accident which occurred to a train and several wagons on a railway line, and in an action against the Railway Company for negligence the defence was set up (inter alia) that the accident was caused by the breaking of a defective link in one of the couplings of one of the wagons. The Lord Ordinary decided against the Railway Company, holding that they had failed to discharge the onus which lay upon them under the principle of res ipsa loquitur of showing that the accident had occurred owing to a cause or causes over which they had no control, and for which they were not responsible, and he held that the driver of the train had been negligent, and that the defect in the link might have been, and should have been, discovered on a reasonable inspection. This decision was reversed by the First Division, which came to the conclusion that the driver had not been negligent, and that the defect in the link was latent and could not have been discovered, but on appeal the judgment of the Lord Ordinary was restored. In the House of Lords all the Law Lords were in agreement with his decision that the defect was latent and undiscoverable by an ordinary inspection, but upon the question as to whether or not there was negligence on the part of a driver there was a difference of opinion, a majority holding that there was such negligence.

In giving his dissenting judgment on this point, Lord Dunedin makes these important observations as to the burden of proof where such a principle is invoked, saying, at p. 54: "Taking the cases in which the mere fact of the accident is relevant to infer negligence, it is sometimes said, and the Lord Ordinary has said it, that there is then raised a presumption of negligence which the defender has got to rebut. I think that this is too absolute a method of expressing the legal result in all cases."

It was this same feeling that, I think, led Lord Adam to say in Milne v. Townsend (1) 882) 19 R. 830): "The respondent can only speak so as to throw the inference of fault upon the defender in some cases where the exact cause of the accident is unexplained." If indeed 'relevant to infer' and 'necessarily infers' were the same thing, then I think it would be right to say that, when an accident arises in cases where the doctrine is applicable, then a presumption of fault would arise which must be overcome by contrary evidence, and that is the way that the Lord Ordinary has looked at the matter. But 'relevant to infer' and 'necessarily infers' are not synonymous, and the difference becomes of moment in a case like the present. I think this is a case where the circumstances warrant the view that the fact of the accident is relevant to infer negligence. But what is the next step? I think that, if the defenders can show a way in which the accident may have occurred without negligence, the cogency of the accident by itself disappears, and the pursuer is left as he began, namely, that he has to show negligence. I need scarcely add that the suggestion of how the accident may have occurred must be a reasonable suggestion.

"For example, in Scott v. The London & St. Katharine Docks Co." (13 L. T. Rep. 148; (1865) 3 H. & C. 596) "a case where a bag of flour fell on a man who was passing along a quay in front of a warehouse, it would not have been sufficient to say that the flour bag might have fallen from a passing balloon. I think this view of mine is borne out by the expressions used in the case of Scott. Erle, C. J., who gave the judgment of the court (and it is to be noticed that though he and Mellor, J., did not agree with the majority on the facts, the whole matter depending on the interpretation of the judge's notes, the judgment was unanimous on the law) expressed himself thus: 'There must be reasonable evidence of negligence. But where the thing is shown to be under the management of the defendant or his servants, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from want of care.' I take notice of the word 'explanation'; it is not in absence of 'proof.'"

This insistence of Lord Dunedin upon the onus being discharged merely by the giving of an explanation as opposed to the necessity of proving the absence of negligence has been stressed in a number of more recent cases. Thus, in the case under discussion Mr. Justice Atkinson puts the matter in this way, saying, at p. 272 and p. 828 respectively: ".....(3) Where the onus is on the owners under the first principle"—that is to say, where the accident proved is of such a nature as to raise a presumption of negligence—"that onus is discharged by proving facts from which the inference that the accident was not caused by negligence is as equally strong, that is, equally consistent with the facts, as the inference that it was caused by negligence," and he held that such an explanation was forthcoming on the facts then before him.

Again, the same principle was applied, and an explanation was accepted in The Kite (149 L. T. Rep. 498; (1933) P. 154) which was the case of a collision between a barge which was being towed by a tug and the buttress of an arch of a bridge across a river. There Mr. Justice Langton, in stating his view of the onus which lay upon the owners of the tug to rebut the presumption of negligence, says, at p. 503 and at p. 170 respectively, after quoting the words of Lord Dunedin (sup.): "Now, if that be a correct statement of the law—and I humbly think it is—what the defendants have to do here is not to prove that their negligence did not cause this accident. What they have to do is to give a reasonable explanation, which, if it be accepted is an explanation showing that it happened without their negligence. They need not even go so far as that, because, if they give a reasonable explanation which is equally consistent with the accident happening without their negligence as with their negligence, they have again shifted the burden of proof back to the plaintiffs to show—as they always have to show from the beginning—that it was the negligence of the defendants that caused the accident."

And this last judgment was followed in The Mulbera (156 L. T. Rep. 348; (1937) P. 82) which was a claim arising out of the sinking of a barge in a dock. For further cases see Langham v. Governors of Wellingborough School and Fryer ((1932) 147 L. T. Rep. 91); The Stranna (157 L. T. Rep. 462; (1937) P. 130); Brook's Wharf and Bull Wharf, Limited v. Goodman Brothers (156 L. T. In re Witnesses

Countless are the stories that have been handed down from generation to generation regarding witnesses, their idiosyncracies in their mode of giving evidence, their endeavours to elude the little traps laid for them by the skilful cross-examiner, who has so often the witness at a disadvantage. Occasionally, it is true, the witness scores in the skirmish that takes place, but more often, unless he chances to be very astute, he is at a disadvantage. Some cynical person of a past generation, it will be remembered, classified witnesses into three categories, witnesses simpliciter, blank witnesses, and experts. But this is, perhaps, too strong a way of putting it. In an old volume which the present writer has long had in his bookcase, there is a chapter devoted to witnesses which treats first of all of the expert witnesses who were called in the early days when railway enterprises were very much in the forefront, and the professional witness was frequently to be seen and heard in the committee rooms of Westminster. It is said of one engineer, described as a "dexterous knave," that he spent his days in swearing in one committee room that black was white, and in another that green was red, it being generally known that he spoke for the sake of his ten guineas a day, and that his most veracious statements usually contained a vein of alloy. Having by his ingenious misrepresentations gravely injured a case in which Mr. Davenport Hill was professionally engaged as counsel, and Mr. Tite, the eminent architect, was a projector, this witness was suddenly struck with apoplexy and died. "Well, Hill, have you heard the news?" inquired Mr. Tite of the barrister whom he encountered in Middle Temple Lane on the morning after the engineer's death, "have you heard that so and so died yesterday?" "I can't say," was the reply, "that I shall shed many tears for his loss. He was an arrant scoundrel." "Come, come," replied the other, "you have always been too hard on that man. I do verily believe that in the whole course of his life that man never told a lie—out of the witness box." Curiously enough it is added that the deceased who lied in public was said to be punctiliously honestly honourable in private life. It seems an odd conclusion, but such is the story.

Jeffreys and the Witness.

It is traditionally reported that in the reign of Charles II. in badgering a witness, no barrister could surpass George Jeffreys, of sanguinary fame. Nevertheless, on more than one occasion he met his match in the witness-box. "You fellow in the leathern doublet," he is reported to have said to a countryman whom he was about to cross-examine, "pray what are you paid for swearing?" "God bless you, sir," was the reply, "and make you an honest man," answered the witness, looking counsel full in the face and speaking with a voice of hearty good-humour, "if you had no more for lying than I have for swearing, you would wear a leathern doublet as well as I."

Erskine's Methods

It is said that Erskine's treatment of witnesses was sometimes unfair, but his jocoseness was generally distinct from mere flippancy and his unfairness was redeemed by such delicacy of wit that his most cutting observations seldom annoyed the witness. A story has come down which tells us that a religious enthusiast, on entering the witness box, objected to take the oath in the customary manner, but stated that though he would not kiss the book he was quite ready to hold up his hand and swear. On being asked by Erskine to give his reason for this departure from the usual mode of testifying in the courts, he answered that "it is written in the Book of Revelation that the angel standing on the sea held by his hand." "But that," interjected Erskine, "cannot apply to your case, for in the first place you are no angel, secondly, you cannot tell how the angel would have sworn if he had stood on dry land as you do." The witness declined to budge from the position he had taken up and was permitted to give his testimony in his own way, and so impressed apparently was the jury by his evidence that they found a verdict adverse to Erskine's client. Erskine might have remembered, but for the moment he chose to forget, that in Scotland, his native country, the method of taking the oath is for the witness to hold up his right hand and repeat the words after the judge. Erskine was usually very happy in his sayings; one that has often been recalled, but which will bear repetition, is the opinion which he gave on a case laid before him by his friend, the Duke of Queensberry, popularly known as "Old Q" as to whether he could sue a certain tradesman for breach of contract about the painting of his house. The evidence available being in the view of Erskine totally insufficient to support the case, he wrote, "I am of opinion that this action will not lie, unless the witnesses lie too!" Not a few jokes that come down to us have a fairly long pedigree, and so it is in this case, for, as someone pointed out, the story is apparently a revival of the pun attributed to Lord Chancellor Hatton in Bacon's Apophthegmes.

Clergymen as Witnesses.

The late Mr. Balfour Browne, K. C., who specialised at the Parliamentary Bar, in his work, Forty Years at the Bar, expressed the view that clergymen do not, as a rule, make good witnesses. Having been used to an autocratic pulpit, he said, they did not take kindly to the chair where the bladders of their pomposity—his own word—might be pricked by a sharp question. But despite this general view he had known both clergymen of the Church of England and of Rome to give excellent straightforward evidence. Quakers, as Lamb recalled in one of his essays, have always been remarkable for their self-watchfulness, a quality which never gave way to the winds of persecution or to the violence of judge or accuser under trials and racking examinations. "You will never be the wiser, if I sit here answering your questions till midnight," said one of the Friends. "Thereafter, as the answer may be," retorted his examiner:—L. T.

SOLDIERS' OBEDIENCE TO ORDERS.

The summing-up of Stable, J., in R. v. Taylor, at the Manchester Autumn Assizes (ante, p. 227), deserves consideration; the opportunity is convenient to discuss the legal position when a soldier, by way of defence to a criminal charge, pleads obedience to the orders of a superior.

Taylor, a lance-corporal on leave, was on his way, last August, to report to the near-by barracks, as was his duty upon the sounding of an air-raid alert, when he met an air-raid warden endeavouring, with difficulty, to make motorist dim their lights. He assisted the warden, joined by a sergeant of another regiment. One motorist would not respond; the warden saying that the motorist required shooting, the sergeant ordered the lance-corporal to fire. He did so, aiming, he said, for the type. The shot, passing through the back seat, lodged in the box of the driver's respirator. Taylor was charged with shooting with intent to do grievous bodily harm.

Stable, J., addressing the jury, said that England is not under martial law, but under the ordinary criminal law; all citizens—in uniform or not—have the same rights. If the use of a weapon is not justified by circumstances, it cannot be justified by the orders of a superior. Taylor wrongly thought that he was obliged to obey the sergeant's order. Did he intend to cause grievous bodily harm, or merely to give the motorist a sharp warning; if the latter, he was not guilty. And so the jury found.

The most lucid exposition of the legal position of a soldier in the criminal courts is found in Dicey's ninth chapter: A. V. Dicey, Introduction to the study of the Law of Constitution (1939), 9th edn., ed. E. C. S. Wade, Chap. ix, The Army.

"The fixed doctrine of English law is that a soldier, though a member of a standing army, is in England subject to all the duties and liabilities of an ordinary citizen... A soldier is subject to the same criminal liability as a civilian..." (at pp. 300, 301).

What, then, is the position when a soldier is ordered by his superior to do an act which is unlawful?

"When a soldier is put on his trial on a charge of crime, obedience to superior orders is not of itself a defence" (at p. 302).

The note cites Stephen, History of the Criminal Law (1883), vol. i, pp. 204-206, and a curious case is mentioned, R. v. Thomas (1816, 4 M. & S. 441), found in Russell, Crime (1936), 9th edn., vol. i, p. 510. The note refers to Keighley v. Bell (1866), 4 F. & F. 763, 790 and the opinion of Willes, J., that "obedience to an order of a superior officer which is not necessarily or manifestly illegal may be a good defence to a criminal charge against a person subject to military law" (at p. 303, note 4; writers italics).

The opinion of Willes, J., was expressed in argument. His exact words are:

"I believe that the better opinion is, that an officer or soldier, acting under the orders of his superior—not being necessarily or manifestly illegal—would be justified by his orders."

The point did not arise for decision in that case.

A soldier must obey the lawful orders of his superior; but such obedience does not, of itself, excuse a breach of the ordinary law. This conflict of duties may occasionally lead to difficulties, but the three examples given by Dicey, and cited below, may provide a criterion.

An officer orders his soldiers to fire upon rioters, force being necessary to quell the disturbance. The soldiers must obey, not only because their officer has given the order, but because, in the circumstances, the order is justified by the law of the land. This is what happened in the Featherstone Riots, 1893, when a body of rioters armed with sticks and cudgels, entered the yard of Ackton Colliery and demanded the withdrawal of a small number of soldiers placed there to defend it from the attack of a mob. The mob increased and broke the windows of the building where the troops were stationed. The soldiers retreating were surrounded by a mob of 2,000. The crowd was called upon to disperse; the proclamation in the Riot Act was read. Within an hour, and upon the crowd's refusal to disperse, the captain gave orders to fire and a few bystanders were killed. The report of the Committee of Inquiry (including Bowen, L. J.) contains an authoritative statement of the law upon the duty of soldiers. (Dicey, op. cit., Appendix, Section V, Duty of Soldiers called upon to disperse an Unlawful Assembly, pp. 620-624.) The rioters intended to set fire to the colliery and assault those upon the premises: serious outrage was threatened to persons and property, and all peaceable subjects were bound to assist in prevention—even, in a case like this, by deadly weapons.

"Officers and soldiers are under no special privileges and subject to no special responsibilities as regards this principle of the law. A soldier for the purpose of establishing civil order is only a citizen armed in a particular manner. He cannot because he is a soldier excuse himself if without necessity he takes human life" (cited at p. 621).

It depends upon "the necessities of the case" whether military assistance be summoned; such a course ought to be "the last expedient of the civil authorities." But once the call has gone, and the necessity has arisen, to refuse such assistance is a misdemeanour. The military must exercise care and skill, and must act so as to prevent serious crime. No set of rules exists to govern their conduct. The presence of a magistrate, important though it be, is not fundamental. Whether the moment has come to fire depends on "the necessities of the case"; is it necessary to fire in order to prevent serious crime, and is the firing conducted without negligence? An order from the magistrate is required by military regulations:

"But the order of the magistrate has at law no legal effect. Its presence does not justify the firing if the magistrate is wrong. Its absence does not excuse the officer for declining to fire when the necessity exists" (at p. 622).

The Featherstone troops had no alternative but to fire; the firing was conducted with reasonable skill and care. These two conditions thus made out, the soldiers incurred no legal responsibility; a guilty ring-leader shot dead, died by justifiable homicide; an innocent person killed without negligence, died by accidental death (at p. 623).

Dicey's second example is an extreme case upon the other side of the line. An officer, in a time of political excitement, orders his soldiers to arrest and shoot without trial a popular leader who is suspected of treasonable designs, but against whom no crime is proved. The soldiers must disobey this command; if they obey, they and the officer are guilty of murder.

The difficulty is in the third example. An officer, thinking firearms to be necessary, orders his men to fire on a crowd. The force intended is excessive; threats would, in the circumstances, have sufficed. The order, therefore, being unlawful, the officer will be criminally responsible for the death of any person killed. What should the soldier do? Reverting to the case that Stable, J., tried, would the lance-corporal have been justified in shooting in order, by causing grievous bodily harm, to stop the car?

The answer that Stephen, J., gave extra-judicially (History of the Criminal Law, vol. i, pp. 205, 206)—cited by Dicey (op. cit., pp. 304-306)—follows the opinion of Willes, J., in Keighley v. Bell (1866, 4 F. & F. 763, 790):

"Probably . . . the order of a military superior would justify his inferiors in executing any order for giving which they might fairly suppose their superior officer to have good reasons . . . The doctrine that a soldier is bound under all circumstances whatever to obey his superior officer would be fatal to military discipline itself, for it would justify the private in shooting the colonel by the orders of the captain, or in deserting to the enemy on the field of battle on the order of his immediate superior. I think it is no less monstrous to suppose that superior orders would justify a soldier in the massacre of unoffending civilians in times of peace, or in the exercise of inhuman cruelties, such as the slaughter of women and children, during a rebellion."

The test, then, as propounded by Stephen, J., is not—as Stable, J., appeared to suggest—was the order lawful, but was the soldier reasonably entitled to suppose that the order was lawful?

"The only line that presents itself to my mind," continued Stephen, J., "is that a soldier should be protected by orders for which he might reasonably believes his officer to have good grounds."

A soldier who pleads, by way of defence to a criminal charge, the orders of a superior officer may, short of acquittal, have protection, in effect, in certain other ways, where a conviction or punishment would be unjust.

First, a nolle prosequi may be entered, by leave of the Attorney General: "leave is never given except upon good cause shown, and is never refused when the interests of justice require it": Archbold, Pleading, Evidence and Practice in Criminal Cases (1938), 30th edn., p. 110. Secondly, a nominal sentence may be imposed. Thirdly, the Crown may grant a pardon.

The above opinion of Stephen, J., is accepted by the learned editors (of whom Avery, J., was the chief) of the article on Criminal Law and Procedure in Halsbury's Laws of England, 2nd edn., vol. ix, p. 24; note (a). And see p. 340, note (h), where the law is thus stated in the text:

"A soldier or airman in a subordinate position is not, it would seem, criminally responsible for the consequences of obeying the orders of his superior officer whose orders he is bound to obey, provided those orders are not, having regard to the occasion upon which they are given and executed, manifestly illegal."

In R. v. Trainer (1864, 4 F. & F. 105) the engine driver and the fireman of a railway train were charged, at the Surrey Assizes, with manslaughter. The Report says:

"The learned Judge [sc. Willes, J.] said he should hold that in a criminal case an inferior officer must be held justified in obeying the directions of a superior, not obviously improper or contrary to law—that is, if an inferior officer acted honestly upon what he might not unreasonably deem to be the effect of the orders of his superior, he would not be guilty of culpable negligence, those orders not appearing to him at the time to be improper or contrary to law" (at pp. 111, 112).

An interesting account of the rights and duties of military forces in relation to the dispersion of unlawful assemblies will be found in the summing-up of Holroyd, J., in Bedford v. Birley and Others (1822, 1 St. Tr. (N. S.) 1071, 1210-1234), and the judgments upon a motion for a new trial, which was refused, by Abbott, L. J., Bayley, Holroyd and Best, JJ. (at pp. 1235-1262).

In R. v. Hutchinson (1864, 9 Cox Crim. Cas. 555, Major-General Hutchinson was to be charged at the Devon Assizes with manslaughter. He was commandant of the forces at Plymouth. A target was placed in the Sound, under the direction of the Horse Guards, and the artillerymen were accustomed to practice by firing at it with ball. One night, during practice, a ball missed the target, struck the waves, ricocheted and hit a boatman who was taking a boat across the Sound. The bill of indictment against the Major-General was thrown out by the Grand Jury and the prosecution offered no evidence. The Report contains an admirable exposition, addressed to the Grand Jury, by Byles, J. (at pp. 556-8)—L. J.

JUSTICE

What is justice? Is it more than an ideal? Can it truthfully be said that its presence may consist of mere applications of the abstract to the concrete?

We are fond of saying that "justice is done" or that "justice is not done." But is not our viewpoint based mostly upon an assumption in each case, as to what the facts are? If in any case we are wrong as to the facts, does not our conclusion as to the presence or absence of justice tumble into the abyss with the initial fallacy?

Most people are born with an inherent sense of justice but are unable to sense clearly what it means. For that reason they confuse the concrete with the ideal. They love to think that they themselves are just. They are inclined to be critical of attempted applications of justice by others. The error of viewpoint, if any, is largely one of egotism and egocentrism. Yet is it really error? Is it not nature's purpose to mount our reasoning processes upon a foundation of self-importance so that because, and only because, of the very arrogance of that urge we may engage in assertion of our opinions against those of others, and in the resultant dispute raise a cloud of smoke through which the light of truth may presently shine?

Justice is no more than an ideal. Human kind loves fair play. That, we say, is justice. Yet what is fair play? Does not that present itself according to variations of human concept? Take, for instance, the philosophy of retributive or compensatory justice. At one time this was quite solidly entrenched. "An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" expressed it in a nut shell. Yet came the time when a great Teacher of Men sought to disabuse our minds of it. He said, "If a man smite thee on one cheek, turn thou the other." That tenet has a large following in the world today, and in practical applications it governs many of our thoughts and actions.

It would be folly to attempt to reconcile the many variant conceptions of justice as an ideal. All have their uses, even the one expressed by Nietzsche that might is or makes right. Each may be utilized in proper time and place to accomplish pragmatic ends when assertion of an ideal as such may fail as a rallying cry.

Let us take any practical application of justice and strip the factual conclusions to the bone; can we ever be sure that justice is really done? It was related of King Solomon that two women disputed as to which was the mother of a certain child. The King lifted his sword. He said, "I shall cut the child in two, so that you may share equally." One woman replied, "Let it be so done, for it is just." The other wept and besought that the child's life be spared even though it be given to the other. Right here were two widely varying philosophies one being based upon the justice of equal division of the flesh, because of inability of either to prove maternity, the other being based upon the conception of justice as wholly for the benefit of the child. King Solomon awarded the child to the woman who wept, because by her affection she showed the likelihood of maternity. Yet could he be really sure of it? On the hard paths of human experience do we not sometime find unnatural parents and adoring foster-parents? May not there be sound reason for the hypothesis that in the case before King Solomon the woman who possessed no affection could be moved to assert her claim only by actual knowledge that such was the fact, and that the woman who wept had such depth of alien affection as to be motivated thereby to a false assertion of maternity? Such cases are not infrequently found following adoptions. King Solomon's philosophy was apparently that motherhood did not really matter, but that the interests of the child were predominant, and could best be entrusted the woman who bore the child most affection.

When we go to the courts for justice we often get something quite different, something which may be characterized as an application of a fairly sound conception of the ideal to a more or less false assumption as to the facts. Right here we have the greatest stumbling block to the administration of justice, and there appears to be no way to avoid it.

Try as we may, we will never be able to get away from the taking of testimony as a means of arriving at truth. But how do we know which witnesses tell the truth, guided by accurate observation and recollection and unbiased idealism, and which, though seemingly truthful, are but plausibly endeavoring to mislead others, to the end that the side which for some reason or other they happen to favour may win? And how many who bear witness with intended fairness are unable to testify accurately because of psychological impediment?

There should be no sense of futility because of these realizations. Nor should we substitute cynicism for the respect to which the service of any ideal is entitled. We must bear always in mind that we fight with such weapons as are available, and that when we lose a fight the fault is not always ours but is often that of the weapons. Yet we must continue to fight, fight, come what may, content in a realization that it is a struggle to uphold the keystone in the arch of civilization by the practical application to the affairs of life of justice as an ideal.—Case, and Comment.

Wit & Humour.

The Wrong Man. A salesman, seeking to register at a small-town hotel, was told there were no rooms left. "But can't you manage to put me up somewhere?" he pleaded. "I'm leaving first thing in the morning."

The night clerk scratched his head. "Well, there's an extra cot in Colonel Twitchell's room," he relented. "He's an old customer, and probably wouldn't mind if you tiptoed out and didn't disturb him."

"That's fine," the traveler said. "Just call me at seven."

The following morning, bright and early, he crept out of the room and hurried down to pay his bill. To his surprise, the elevator man nodded to him politely. "Good morning, Colonel Twitchell." At the desk, the clerk smiled: "Good morning, Colonel Twitchell." Bewildered, he hurried across the lobby, past a scrub-woman, who looked up and wished him "Good morning, Colonel Twitchell." Taking a grip on his sanity, he hailed a cab. "To the station!" The driver nodded: "O. K. Colonel Twitchell."

At the station the ticket agent said, "Leaving for the city, Colonel Twitchell?" With a groan he staggered back from the window and, for the first time, he saw his reflection in the mirror of a slot machine.

"My God," he gasped, "they woke up the wrong man!"—Case and Comment.

NEED FOR AMENDING S. 100, CIVIL P. C., S. 90, EVI. ACT AND S. 388, CRIMINAL P. C.*

By Mohammad Ahmad Kazmi, M. L. A. (Central.)

In the last sessions of the Central Assembly I introduced amongst others, three Bills of general public importance: viz. a Bill to amend s. 100 of the Civil P. C., a Bill to amend s. 90 of the Indian Evi. Act and a Bill to amend s. 388 of the Criminal P. C. They have passed through the second stage and according to the decision of the Assembly they are to be circulated for eliciting opinion thereon by July 15, 1941. I may here mention the objects of the three Bills.

The Civil P. C. Amendment Bill provides that to sub-s. (1) of s. 100 of the Civil P. C., the following shall be added at the end, namely:—

(d) The original decree of the trial Court having in appeal been varied, cancelled or reversed:

Provided that a High Court, while hearing a second appeal on any of the grounds (a) (b) or (c) above may in its discretion determine the correctness or otherwise of the decision on points of facts also, if it thinks that the decision of the Court below is erroneous and unjust."

As would appear from the above, the object of the Bill is to provide a second appeal on facts, where the trial Court and the lower Appellate Court have differed in their findings. Under the law as it stands to-day, the first Court of Appeal has got a right to decide a matter after a perusal of the whole evidence on record, but the High Court is precluded from looking into evidence and is bound by the finding of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court.

In 1929 A. I. R. p. 152 on p. 155, their Lordships of the Privy Council confirmed the decision of Lord Macnaghten to the effect that "there is no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of an erroneous findings of fact however gross or inexcusable the error may seem to be". There appears to be no justification for such a hard rule, which takes away the right of the highest Courts of Justice in India to rectify mistakes and meet out justice even where the Judges feel convinced that injustice has been done. If the High Court in cases in which the first appeal lies to it, reverses a finding arrived at by the trial Court, the party aggrieved is entitled to appeal to the Privy Council and the Privy Council on appeal is entitled to look to the merits of the case, but it is just otherwise with the High Court. This rule is causing great hardship to the litigant public and is a very improper restriction on the powers of the High Court. By this amendment I propose that in case of non-concurrent findings by the first two Courts, the appeal may be heard on merits—facts as well as law, and in case of concurrent findings of facts, though the party aggrieved shall have no right of appeal on facts, yet the High Court will have the power to interfere with it at its discretion.

In the statement of objects and reasons I have dealt with this question in greater detail and I see no justification for this hard rule.

The Evi. Act Amendment Bill seeks to add the following proviso to the s. 90:

"Provided that the word 'document' shall include a copy of the document obtained from the Registration Department or some other Govt. Office, if such copy is admissible in evidence under s. 65."

Section 90 of the Indian Evi. Act provides that the original documents, more than 30 years old coming out of proper custody are to be admitted in evidence without being formally proved by the attesting witnesses or other persons making statement to the effect that the document was executed before them. This presumption is provided for the reason that after the lapse of 30 years or more it is rather difficult to get the executants of the documents or the attesting witnesses thereto who may depose about the due execution of the document. Formerly this presumption used to be applied to the copies of such old documents also and there were rulings of the High Court to that effect. In 1935, the Privy Council (in 1935 A. L. J. p. 847) held on a strict interpretation of s. 90 of the Evi. Act that the presumption cannot be made to copies. No doubt the interpretation is correct, but it has caused great hardships to the litigants as it is mostly difficult to obtain such old persons to appear as witnesses. It is to meet this difficulty that the Amending Bill has been moved.

*The learned Author of the article introduced during the winter Session three Bills in the Central Legislative Assembly, relating to their amendments. These Bills have passed through the second stage and are being circulated for eliciting public opinion thereon by July 15, 1941. The importance of the subject to the lawyers need not be stressed.—[Ed].

The Criminal P. C. Amendment Bill seeks to remove an unjustifiable practice. It seeks to insert the words "Imprisonment and fine or" after the words "has been sentenced to" in s. 388 of the Criminal P. C. Under s. 388 as it stands if a person is sentenced to fine only, he can get time for the payment of fine, but in cases where in addition to fine, he is also given a term of imprisonment, then no time can be given to him for the payment of fine. For example if a person is sentenced to a fine of Rs. 500 only, he can be given time by the Court to pay the fine, but if he is, in addition sentenced to imprisonment till the rising of the Court, then he cannot be given time for the payment of fine. Thus if he cannot arrange for the fine at once he must be sent to jail. The hardship is too apparent to require a comment and it is to remove this that Bill has been introduced.

I have given a summary of the objects and reasons of the three Bills to show their importance to the public. The views of the public and of the lawyers and Judges have to be ascertained before the Bills can be further proceeded with in the Assembly. The method of circulation generally adopted by the Govt. of India is that they send the Bills to the Provincial Govts. who in their turn send them to the District Magistrates, who in their discretion send them to individuals or Associations for opinion. As the time upto July 15, for this purpose is rather short, so I suggest that those interested in the Bills should send copies of their opinions in writing regarding their approval or disapproval of the Bills or making suggestions regarding any alterations in addition to or omission from these Bills to the District Magistrates, Provincial Govts. or the Hon'ble the Home Member Govt. of India and if possible a copy to me and a copy to the press. The opinions regarding the three Bills must be written out separately. If the copies of the Bills are required they may be asked for from the office of the District Magistrates and if they be not available there they may be obtained from me. Looking to the importance of the Bills I hope that the public in general and the lawyers and Bar Associations in particular would give them a careful consideration and give expression to their views at an early date.

DEATH OF A MAGISTRATE.

At the North London Police Court on 23rd January the stipendiary magistrate, Mr. Frank Powell, referred to the effect which the recent death of Mr. Basil Watson, K. C., who had previously sat as magistrate at that court, had upon certain pending proceedings.

He said that there were several cases in the list in which those who were charged pleaded "Guilty" or were convicted by the late Mr. Basil Watson, and the question arose whether he (Mr. Powell) had any jurisdiction to perform any act in regard to those cases. It might be that the death of a metropolitan magistrate rendered previous proceedings null and that the convictions already recorded were technically the act of the court as distinct from the act of the particular magistrate trying the cases, or it might be that no other magistrate had jurisdiction later to try such a case (The Times, 24th January).

The matter was argued in a specific case which came on the following day at the same court before Mr. Brodrick (The Times, 25th January). It was submitted on behalf of the metropolitan police that there were two separate processes of law, one of conviction and one of sentence, and when a man was convicted, the same court, although differently constituted, could pass sentence. The magistrate held that he had no jurisdiction and the defendant was discharged.

• So far as preliminary acts in summary proceedings are concerned, such as receiving an information or complaint or issuing a summons or warrant, such acts may be performed by one justice even where the information or complaint must be heard by two or more justices, and that justice need not be one of the magistrates who actually hears the case (s. 29, Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848). Where, however, any statute requires that an information or complaint must be heard and determined by two or more justices, or that a conviction or order should be made by two or more justices, such justices must be present and acting together during the whole of the hearing and determination of the case (ibid.).

Moreover, it is expressly provided by s. 37 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, that a warrant or summons issued by a justice of the peace under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, or any other Act, or otherwise, shall not be avoided by reason of the justice who signed the same dying or ceasing to hold office.

There are two important decisions to which reference should be made on the question of proceedings which are interrupted by a magistrate's death or illness. In In re Guerin (1888), 58 L. J. M. C. 42, evidence was heard for six days on an application for a writ of habeas corpus to bring Guerin out of custody. It was alleged that he had committed larceny in France, and his extradition had been demanded. A question arose as to his nationality and the case was remanded for evidence as to this to be called. This evidence was later heard by another magistrate, who issued a warrant for Guerin's extradition.

Wills, J., said that the proceeding was contrary to justice, as it could only be satisfactorily conducted by one who had heard the case throughout. He quoted from R. v. Bertrand, L. R. 1 P. C. 520, where Coleridge, C. J., said that the most careful note could not convey the evidence fully in some of its most important elements—the look or the manner of the witness, his hesitation, his doubts, his confidence or precipitancy, his calmness or consideration, his manner on a statement of any particular moment. It was the dead body of the evidence without its spirit. The application for the writ was granted.

These observations of Coleridge, C. J., were again referred to by Phillimore, J., in Ex parte Bottomley [1909] 2 K. B. 15. In that case several persons were charged with conspiracy to defraud. After the evidence of a large number of witnesses had been heard, the magistrate fell ill and could not continue the hearing. A re-hearing was commenced before another magistrate and counsel proposed to recall some of the witnesses, re-swear them, read to them the depositions which had been taken, ask them to correct their statements where they appeared to be inaccurate, and ask any further necessary questions. He proposed then to tender them for cross-examination, with liberty to re-examine. The remainder of the witnesses would then be called in the ordinary way.

Phillimore, J., said that there was no authority that this was a wrong course. The main objection was that the procedure involved putting long leading questions to the witnesses. According to "Stephens' Digest of the Law of Evidence," 6th ed., art. 128, p. 146, leading questions could be put in examination-in-chief and in re-examination only with the leave of the court, but could be put in cross-examination without such leave. Other authorities showed that there was no objection to a long leading question. His lordship held that it was a matter for the discretion of the court in a preliminary hearing, and was to be exercised in the best interests of justice. He distinguished In re Guerin, supra, and R. v. Bertrand, supra, the latter on the ground that a jury at a murder trial had disagreed and notes of evidence taken at the first trial were read over to the jury at the second trial. Both that and In re Guerin were somewhat different from the present case.

Ex parte Bottomley is a difficult case to reconcile with previous authorities; and it certainly appears to be stretching a point to call the reading of a long deposition and then asking whether it is correct a long leading question. Be that as it may, s. 29 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, requires all the justices required to hear and determine a case to be present and acting together during the whole of the hearing and the determination of the case—and the determination, it is submitted, includes sentence. This rule, it is submitted, applies to metropolitan police magistrates and stipendiary magistrates with equal force, having regard to s. 33 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, which empowers a single metropolitan police magistrate or stipendiary magistrate to do alone whatever the Act authorises one or more magistrates to do. (See also the Metropolitan Police Courts Act, 1839, s. 14, and the Stipendiary Magistrates Act, 1858, ss. 1 and 2.)

One further point in relation to this difficult question deserves particular consideration. Mr. Brodrick said, at North London, on 24th January, that this matter had been a thorn in the side of magistrates ever since the cases of Sheridan and Grant (1936), 2 All E. R. 883, 1156; 80 Sol. J. 535. These decisions were directed to the somewhat difficult question whether a person found guilty by petty sessions of the offence of obtaining credit by false pretences or fraud from A contrary to s. 13 of the Debtors Act, 1869, could be committed to quarter sessions and a charge added of obtaining credit from B, when the justices had heard his criminal record. Humphreys, J., said that the offence of which he had been found guilty was precisely the same and based on the same facts as that charge in the added count, and therefore the plea of autrefois convict was good "Conviction," according to such authorities as R. v. Blaby [1894] 2 Q. B. 170, and R. v. Miles, 24 Q. B. D. 423, meant plea of guilty or a finding of a verdict of guilty, and did not include sentence. These cases decide that a person has been convicted if he has been found guilty or has pleaded guilty. The difficulty, therefore, in which a magistrate finds himself when he succeeds to a case in which a magistrate has heard the evidence and found a verdict of guilty or taken a plea of guilty and died before awarding sentence, is as follows: He cannot follow the course pursued in R. v. Bottomley, supra, without being confronted with the plea of autrefois convict. On the other hand, he cannot proceed to award sentence without, it is submitted, offending against ss. 29 and 33 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848. The result is, as Mr. Brodrick found, that certain undeserving convicted persons must escape sentence. There is clearly a matter for the attention of the Legislature as soon as parliamentary time is available.—S. J.

Extracts from Contemporaries.

Escape and prison Breaking

A person who merely refrains from informing against one whom he believes to be an escaped prisoner may not offend against the law, but if he gives actual assistance by harbouring him or giving him food or clothing, the position is different.

Escape from prison without force is a common law misdemeanour and any person who assists would be also guilty of such misdemeanour. If the escape be held to continue so long as the prisoner remains at large; a person who helps him so to remain is aiding and abetting him and therefore is liable as a principal offender. But if, as we think, the offence of escape is not a continuing offence, but is completed once he has shaken off custody, a person who subsequently helps him may perhaps not be guilty of an offence. A person who actually helps a prisoner to escape or sends articles into a prison to facilitate escape from prison is by statute guilty of felony; but this would not appear to apply to the cases we are contemplating.

To break out of prison by force is either a felony or a misdemeanour according as the charge for which the prisoner is in custody is felony or misdemeanour. In case of the felony, but not the misdemeanour, a person who, knowing the felony to have been committed (i. e., the escape) receives or aids the felon so as to hinder the course of justice is guilty as an accessory after the fact.—J. P.

Probation After Convictions.

The old idea that probation was for first offenders only is dying out, though it persisted far too long, and even magistrates have been heard to say that they thought an offender could not be put on probation if he had been previously convicted. It is true that the Act of 1887 was called the Probation of First Offenders' Act, but 1887 is a long time ago and there is really no excuse for speaking of that, repeated, Act to-day. The Probation of Offenders' Act of 1907 cleared up the position satisfactorily.

A Halifax woman found guilty of stealing was recently put on probation, although there were four previous convictions including one for forgery. But those convictions were from 1914 to 1930 and the magistrates felt justified in what they did, because she had been honest for ten years.

If we may say so, we agree, and we think this is a discriminating use of the probation system. Often it is quite impossible to deal leniently with a person who has a record, if only because he shows no sign of wishing to amend. But there are occasional cases where even an old convict may be worth the risk of a trial on probation, and the late Sir Robert Wallace once told a meeting that at the London Sessions he often dealt in that way with ex-convicts. Critics accused him of overdoing probation. Be that as it may, he did as much for the probation system as any judge of his time and the good he did lives after him. There should be no hard and fast rules limiting probation to persons with no convictions or only one conviction. The root of the matter is to look at each case in the light of all the circumstances, and to realise that no two cases, and no two people, are exactly alike.—J. P.

SEDITION

Some little time ago the Court of Criminal Appeal quashed a conviction for sedition which had been passed on Circuit. The case was shortly reported in a lay contemporary, and we hope for something fuller if the law reports reach it. In the lay press we read that the learned judge had not adequately charged the jury on the meaning or legal definition of the word "sedition". We can well understand his difficulty. Even if he had had his law library with him, he would have found it difficult to construct a definition which would have been consistent with all the charges and judgments—and they are many—on the true significance of this debatable term. Looking at the infallible Oxford English Dictionary, we find it derived from se and ire. The prefix "se" has a sense of apartness or severance. It is the familiar prefix which we find in such words as "segregate," "separate," and so forth. We all know ire. The letter "d" is apparently slipped in for purposes of easy pronunciation. The composite word has nothing whatever to do, as the amateur might very well believe, with sitting down. However, apart from the dictionary, we find when we look at the Law Reports that there is an unfortunate difference among judges as to the legal meaning of this offence, which begins with going apart. Indeed, it has travelled a long and devious journey from its source. Let us look at some of the cases.

In a speech replete with learning Mr. Littleton (afterwards Sir Edward), arguing in Stroud's case ((1629) 3 St. Tr. at p. 254), said that the seditious "take a diversion and draw other". He thus followed the original meaning of going apart. There is a fine allocation on sedition in this case which limited space compels us to pass by with a mere reference. It will repay careful study. In R. v. Lovett (3 St. Tr. N. S. 1178) the indictment was for issuing and publishing a seditious libel. The libel was a handbill published in Birmingham after police from London had come down to repress rioting and had, under order of the local magistrates, used some force to disperse a meeting in a place known as the Bull Ring. The handbill contained a record of resolutions of a local body called the "General Convention." It asserted that a "wanton, flagrant and unjust outrage had been made upon the people of Birmingham by a bloodthirsty and unconstitutional force from London, and that the people of Birmingham were the best judges of their own right to meet in the Bull Ring." In directing the jury in R. v. Collins (ibid., 1150), where the defendant was charged with printing and publishing the seditious libel, Mr. Justice Littledale told the jury that they must decide whether the resolutions were a calm discussion of the conduct of the police as a public question, or were intended to persuade the people to make use of physical force and to incite them to tumult and disorder. He allowed full scope to the right of free discussion and to the right to criticise the police and the Government. He asked the jury to answer for themselves the question whether the words used exceeded the reasonable bounds of comment on the conduct of the London Police. The jury found that they did, and gave a verdict of guilty.

In R. v. Lovett (sup.) the evidence given in Collins's case was read over again with the prisoner's consent. The indictment in this case is not fully set out in the report, but that of Collins says that the defendant published a seditious libel in that the publisher intended to excite the Queen's subjects to resist the law, to resist the police while they were on duty, to bring the police force into hatred and contempt, to procure unlawful meeting, to cause the Queen's subjects to believe that the laws were unduly administered, to raise discontent in the public mind and to raise and cause disobedience to the law. Lovett's indictment was, for writing and publishing and causing and procuring to be written and published this seditious libel. Mr. Justice Littledale, in charging the jury, said that if they were satisfied that the defendant published the paper and had the intent as charged, it was in his opinion a seditious libel. A note adds that he said that was his opinion "in point of law." It does not seem, however, that the learned judge ever intended to say that the question of sedition or no sedition was due to be decided as a point of law. Those who charge with sedition or seditious libel must, we think, always submit their case to the jury. All that can be said by a judge is that, if the jury think that the result of a speech or pamphlet is to do one or other of the things which are indicated by the indictment in R. v. Collins, a verdict of guilty of sedition is proper. In neither case is motive discussed. The indictment in R. v. Collins does indeed contain the word "intendedly." If this is a sound indictment the prosecution must, to make good a charge of sedition, give evidence to show not only that the words of the accused were followed, or reasonably likely to be followed, by one of the evil results named in the indictment, but that the accused person intended that this result should follow.

The matter came up again in the Chartist period case of R. v. Russell (6 St. Tr. N. S. 723). After a certain trial in Ireland which had resulted in deportation of one, Mitchell the defendant was charged with having said in public :

"The Government have succeeded in convicting honest John Mitchell. How...? By packed juries and partisan judges. I tell Lord John Russell that I have no sympathy with his damnable Government. John Mitchell had asked whether the Queen had not forgotten her duty to the country. I ask the same question and adopt his views. If the Queen forgets to recognise the people then the people must forget to recognise the Queen... The Government is not worthy the support of any honest man..... There is one safe way of getting rid of bad rulers who forget their duty to their country. I openly avow that I mean private assassination."

Chief Justice Wilde charged the jury at great length. He seemed to rely on them to find as a fact whether a speech is seditious, or not. Perhaps we should say that they are to find from their knowledge what the effect of this or that speech would have upon people in a "state of society" with which the jury are familiar. This would enable them to appreciate most fully both the result to hearers of the words used and the motive of the speaker. The learned Chief Justice declared that the people have the full right to overthrow unpopular governments by constitutional means. But :

"If the tenor of the discourse is to overthrow the Government by violence, by resistance to the law, then, whether that Government be good or bad, approved or disapproved, that is not justifiable..... You will therefore consider what was the sort of overthrow to which the people were invited, whether it was an overthrow by resistance to the law and by tumult and violence, or by regular and constitutional means."

In later years we have some valuable records of judicial definition in the careful pages of Cox's Criminal Cases. The report of R. v. Sullivan and Pigott (11 Cox 44) is the report of a charge by Mr. Justice Fitzgerald given to the grand jury in Dublin in 1868. We have no record of the trial by jury, but the charge to the grand jury is well worth study. Sedition is a comprehensive term and embraces all those practices, whether by word, deed or writing, which are "calculated" to disturb the tranquillity of the State and lead ignorant persons to endeavour to subvert the Government and the laws of the Empire. We pause here to regret once more the judicial use (let us not call it misuse) of the word "calculated." A foreigner, even an English layman, reading it in the context, would not know that it means "likely," and might very well take it that only those acts and words are seditious which have been prepared by calculating and constructive minds with the view of raising disaffection. A little later the learned judge is inconsistent with this definition—that is, if we read his use of "calculated" to be a use in the common judicial sense. Thus :

"Sedition has been described as disloyalty in action; and the law considers as sedition all those practices which have for their object to excite discontent or disaffection, to create public disturbance or to lead to civil war."

On the whole, however, this learned Irish judge seems to think that intention and motive are the gist of the offence. The crime laid, he says, is the intent, and the grand jury could only find a true bill against the accused if they came conscientiously to the conclusion :

"assuming you find the articles to be seditious, that they were published with the intent laid in the indictment, namely to stir up and excite disaffection and sedition amongst the Queen's subjects," and so on. The charge, at this point, is confusing. Apparently the grand jury were free to consider for themselves whether the article or speeches were seditious before they came to consider the finding of a true bill. If this is right, words or publications may be seditious, and found seditious, and yet the publishers or speakers should not be indicted unless a malevolent intention to publish them is also proved. We have not the indictment in the report; and it may have been so framed as to place the learned judge in some difficulty and danger of inconsistency. For ourselves, however, we should say that in trials for sedition the proof of wrongful motive is unnecessary. It is for the jury to decide whether the act or words proved in evidence are likely to have one or more of the results which are described as the essence of sedition. If they find in the affirmative on this question, a verdict of guilty is proper without any proof of motive at all.

This view is clearly taken by Coleridge, J., in the charge to the jury in R. v. Aldred (1912) 22 Cox 1. Whoever, he said, by language incites or encourages others to use physical force or violence in some public matter connected with the state is guilty of publishing a seditious libel.

"The man who is accused may not plead the truth of the statements that he makes as a defence to the charge; nor may he plead the innocence of his motive. That is not a defence to the charge. The test is not either the truth of the language or the innocence of the motive with which he published it. The test is this: was the language used calculated, or was it not, to promote public disorder or physical force ...?"

And so on. If we can overlook the unfortunate use of "calculated" which might deprive the charge of its efficacy and read for it the word "likely," we have a perfect charge.

In R. v. Burns &c., however (16 Cox 355) we find that intention was certainly alleged in the indictment as a vital ingredient in sedition. A well-known, progressive leader (still happily with us) was charged with "seditiously contriving and intending" to disquiet and disturb the peace. At the close of the evidence of facts the learned judge asked the Attorney-General what were the seditious intents alleged against the defendants. The Attorney-General said that the intent was to stir up ill will and disaffection among the Queen's subjects and the suggestion that grievances might be remedied by unconstitutional methods. The Crown, he said, did not charge the defendants with desiring the destructive riots which in fact took place or with directly exciting the crowd to make these, but said that the defendants "must be aware and were answerable for" the natural result of the language used. In charging the jury the learned judge, quoting Mr. Justice Stephen, laid much emphasis on the essential element of intention. To be seditious, words must have a seditious intention, and he goes on to describe this as an intention to bring about one or other of the results (disorder, contempt of the Government and so forth) which are to be described as the ingredients of the offence. Throughout the charge he perpetually directs the attention of the jury to what, as they thought, was the defendants' intention. Thus at p. 363 he says:

"If you think that these defendants, if you trace from the whole matter laid before you, that they had a seditious intention to incite the people to violence, or create public disturbances and disorder, then undoubtedly you ought to find them guilty."

This seems a clear charge to the effect that intention is an essential ingredient in the offence and must be proved. And yet only a few sentences back the learned judge, quoting the charge in R. v. Sullivan (sup.) underlines this passage:

"If, on the other hand, on the whole spirit and import of these articles you are obliged to come to the conclusion that they are seditious libels and that their natural consequences are to excite contempt of Her Majesty's Government or to bring the administration of the law into contempt then it becomes your duty to find a verdict of conviction."

This remark about natural consequences seems to suggest that the learned judge had something in his mind to the effect that, in making up their mind on a charge, the jury must look at the results of publications or acts, not at their motive. On the whole, however, the charge lays so much emphasis on the necessity of proving motive that we cannot make it consistent with the later charge in R. v. Aldred (sup.). The law therefore remains uncertain. We can well believe that a judge on Circuit, even if he had before him all the authorities which we have cited, would have found it impossible to frame a definition of sedition which would be consistent with all of them. Perhaps, when and if we get a fuller report of the case recently decided in the Court of Criminal Appeal, we shall have some light on the matter. In any case, there is need of clear thinking on the subject. As we may unfortunately expect other charges of sedition during the period of our present discontent, no one can doubt the desirability of a clear and unequivocal definition.—L. T.

Marked money.

An officer's soldier servant billeted on a farmer, convicted of stealing money, was detected by the well-known device of marking coins, one of which was subsequently found in the soldier's possession. A police officer said the prosecutor had lost money before and decided to set a trap.

Setting a trap sounds rather unpleasant, and exception might be taken to it, but it is questionable whether this really was setting a trap. Where money is left in its usual place, not exposed to view and providing no exceptional temptation, the marking of coins is no more objectionable than writing a name on a book or other article. In this country the agent provocateur and any provocation to crime, are rightly frowned upon; but there are means of securing evidence, even by providing opportunity for an offence; but are admissible. Thus, where there is good ground for believing that drink is being sold habitually without a licence, a police officer is justified in going to the premises and asking for a drink to see what happens; or an official may quite properly ask for bacon at a shop where he is not registered to see whether the food regulations are being observed. It would be most objectionable if the police officer or the official brought persuasion into play in order to induce an unwilling person to commit an offence he would not commit but for such pressure. It is one thing to ascertain whether offences are being committed, simply by following a customary course of conduct, but quite another thing to offer exceptional temptation. Thus, marked money ought not to be placed where it must offer unusual and unnecessary temptation; but it can be used, as it often is, in a perfectly legitimate way.—J. P.

An Awkward Ambiguity.

Lord Russell of Killowen, the father of the present peer bearing that title, that is, the great Lord Chief Justice, on one occasion, while sitting in the Court of Criminal Appeal, recalled a curious incident which happened to him while on circuit. The question was being discussed as to a jury being told of any previous convictions recorded against a prisoner, and the Lord Chief, in afterwards referring to the matter, said "an innocent remark of mine once gave this information to the jury. The prisoner was defending himself with much ability but he spoke so low as to be frequently inaudible, and having once said something I did not hear, I said, 'What was your last sentence?' Immediately came the reply, 'Six months, my Lord'! —L. T."

A Corrupt Billeting Officer

The Director of Public Prosecutions was instrumental in securing, towards the end of March, a conviction which may provide a useful example and deterrent. One L. C. Jefferies, a retired police sergeant, had been appointed billeting officer at Aldershot. Here, according to the story accepted by the Magistrates, he offered to get an evacuated woman's allowance antedated, in return for 7s. 6d. The woman gave him this sum, and very properly reported him: luckily she had a witness, so that the almost universal difficulty in corruption cases was not found.

In wartime, such a charge looks rather small beer, but it is obvious that the work of finding billets for evacuated persons holds out opportunities for small-scale bribery and corruption (from persons who want good billets and from householders who want to escape burdens) so that it cannot be regarded only as a matter of 7s. 6d. One odd circumstance leaps to the eye, namely, that billeting officers are not employees of a local authority, and, therefore, the Public Bodies Corrupt Practices Act, 1889, does not apply. A billeting officer is appointed by the mayor or chairman of the local authority, in accordance with a request in a circular letter from the Ministry of Health, and such an officer has a contract of service with the mayor. The Aldershot proceedings were taken under sub-s. (1) of s. 1 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1906—we gather, upon the view that there was "an act in relation to his principal's affairs or business" and that, in relation to his principal's affairs or business, Jefferies showed favour to the billeted persons.—J. FROST AND ACT OF GOD

Like most maxims, that which runs Actus Dei nemini facit injuriam must not be taken literally.

When an "injury" has occurred, it is often an "act of God" which has been directly or indirectly responsible for that injury. A reasonable interpretation of this maxim is, no doubt, "No one is legally responsible for an act of God."

ACT OF GOD

What is an act of God? Certainly death comes within that term when arising from natural causes. But the normal activities of natural forces are not, in law, acts of God. It is not correct, therefore, to define such acts as accidents or events arising from natural causes as distinct from human acts. Against acts of this kind (for the most part), man can make suitable provision. Protection from rain can be afforded to property by the reasonable use of windows. No one who is responsible for the care of furniture in a house can expect to be excused if he permits damage to occur by leaving windows open at all times and under all conditions. The damage which ensues may be the act of God in a literal sense, but it is not an act of God in law. One element is missing, namely, inevitability. The plea of act of God can only be successful if the damage or other event has occurred notwithstanding the exercise of due care.

It has been said that act of God means not merely an accidental occurrence but "something overwhelming": Oakley v. Portsmouth, etc. Co. (11 Exch. 623). In the locus classicus, Nugent v. Smith (1 C. P. D. 441, at p. 444), Lord Justice James styled it an act "which could not have been prevented by any amount of foresight and pains and care, reasonably to be expected." The stress is rather on the words italicised by the present writer than on the earlier part of this passage. It has been indicated above that immunity will depend upon the exercise of "due care." To put the matter in another way, the law will not excuse a party who is under a duty to take care, if he has failed to exercise "ordinary care, caution or skill": see The Marpesa (L. R. 4 C. P. 212, 220); The Merchant Prince (1892, P. 179).

Where the care of property is in question the duty is presumably to exercise in relation to that property that degree of care which a prudent man would exercise if the property belonged to him. But a prudent man's conduct must be our guide; for if the property of another is in my care, and I am responsible for its safe keeping, it will not avail me to establish that a similar calamity has befallen my own property: Doorman v. Jenkins (1834, 2 Ad. & E. 258).

PRINCIPLES APPLIED TO FROST

How do these principles apply to damage caused by frost or snow? If we could answer the question, "What would a prudent man do to guard against damage by the bursting of pipes, cisterns or water apparatus, or the fall of snow with injurious results to property or to the person?" we should have solved the problem. In the present state of the authorities that question is not easy to answer.

It might be supposed that if the water apparatus installed in premises were satisfactory in normal winters, persons on whom an obligation is laid by law to instal a satisfactory apparatus would be exempt from liability if owing to frost of unusual severity the apparatus became inoperative with the result that the water overflowed and caused damage. So, indeed, it was held in the old case of Blyth v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. (11 Exch. 781).

Is it, then, the position that our prudent man must consider only what safeguards are necessary under normal weather conditions, leaving the abnormal to take care of itself? The answer is either "No" or "Yes, but....." Even where the overworked doctrine of Rylands v. Fletcher (L. R. 3 H. L. 330) applies, freedom from liability can be claimed if the damage was caused by a third party, Box v. Jubb (1879, 4 Ex. D. 76), or by act of God, Nichols v. Marsland (L. R. 10 Ex. 255) (on appeal, 2 Ex. D. 1), although it would seem that an undiscovered engineering defect would not amount either to an act of God or of a third party for this purpose: Rylands & Fletcher (supra).

The Rylands & Fletcher doctrine applies not only to the storing of large quantities of water, but also to any other thing brought by an occupier on to his land for his own special purposes, and the escape of which may cause injury, such as electricity in large quantities: Eastern, etc., Telegraph Co. v. Capetown Tramways Co. (1902, A. C. 381).

Rylands v. Fletcher was at one time thought to apply to everything artificial which was brought upon land. This view has been shown to be fallacious in a series of cases of which Carstairs v. Taylor (L. R. 6 Ex. 27) is probably the best known: see also Blake v. Wolf (1898, 2 Q. B. 426).

COMMON USER

In the Carstairs case the rule was established that if A brings water on to his land or into his building for the joint use of himself and B, then B has no cause of action if the water escapes without negligence on A's part. In Richards v. Lothian (1913, A. C. 263) this rule was affirmed. And in Collingwood v. Home and Colonial Stores (1936, 81 L. J. 130), where fire broke out through a defect in the electric wiring and adjoining premises were damaged by water used in putting out the fire, it was decided that the bringing of electricity on to premises must now be considered to be a normal user of property, and liability therefore depended upon negligence, which was not shown to exist.

However, the user of water, gas or electricity in a normal and usual manner is a different matter from its use in large quantities for the special purpose of a trade or business. The Court of Appeal had to consider this type of case a few years ago.

ABNORMAL USER

The defendants, occupiers of factory premises on the second floor, allowed water to escape into factory premises on the floor below, thus causing damage to the plaintiffs' property. The defendants' business included the washing of cinematograph films for which large quantities of circulating water were necessary, together with a boiler and carboy for storing water. It was laid down that as the water was on the defendants' premises for their own special purposes and not for the common benefit of the defendants and the plaintiffs, the defendants' user was not a normal user for the purposes for which both the plaintiffs and the defendants were occupying the premises. Accordingly the defendants were liable in damages without proof of negligence: Western Engraving Co. Ltd. v. Film Laboratories, Ltd. (1936, 1 All E. R. 106).

In the Western Engraving case it appears that the defendants had clear knowledge that the water upon their premises had already on one occasion escaped and entered the plaintiffs' property, but that they took no precautions, and in these circumstances it was considered that there was negligence.

Scott, L. J., drew a distinction between the case of a manufacturing occupier using water for his own special purposes and ordinary user of a house "when water is present for the common domestic use of different tenements."

It will be observed that in this case the finding of negligence was not strictly necessary owing to the doctrine of so-called absolute liability under the Rylands & Fletcher doctrine.

FLATS

We turn from trade premises to flats. In the case of Tilley v. Stevenson (1939, 4 All E. R. 207, C. A.) the defendant S. was given the key of a flat on December 14 1938, but did not go into occupation until after December 27. From December 24, to December 27, owing to damage caused by frost, water was escaping from a burst pipe in the defendant's flat, and causing damage to the flat below. S. was working in the flat on December 18, but it was also proved that he had good reason for supposing that water was turned off at the main. The county court judge held that the defendant was responsible for having left the flat without taking all proper and necessary precautions to prevent the water pipes bursting, having regard to the low temperatures then prevailing. He also held that S. was liable for the damage because he had taken no steps to ascertain whether or not the water was laid on, but had merely assumed the contrary on inadequate grounds. In the Court of Appeal, Slesser, L. J., said that the owner gave S. a key. The owner had two other keys, to enable gas and water companies, and possibly electricity authorities, to go on to the premises, but he gave one key to a labourer and the other to a painter as the flat was being prepared for occupation. S. was given a key of the flat on December 14. He went on December 18, to look at the flat and to do some work. He took a kettle of water, as he thought there would be no water. On this point, the landlord confirmed that the water was turned off before S. went to the flat. S. did not go back to the flat until December 27, when he heard water was leaking and somebody else, possibly the painter or decorator or water company, had turned on the stopcock. The suggestion was made that as the B. B. C. had given warning that it was very cold and the pipes might freeze, S. was negligent in not seeing that the stopcock was turned off. Slessor, L. J., observed that the Rylands & Fletcher doctrine was not applicable.

"Therefore, if there is a duty—and it is a very terrifying duty—on a person who wishes to occupy a flat, from the moment he first goes into occupation of a flat, even when he is not actually living there, to remain in the flat in order to see whether or not a workman or anybody else who comes into the flat turns on a stopcock; and if, having done that, he then has to observe the climatic conditions, and if he thinks, or has reason to believe, either from a study of the newspapers, from the wireless, or from some other source of information, that there is likely to be a frost, [if] he must take precautions to see that the pipes do not burst, [and] then, if any or all of these things are not done, apparently he is liable to the tenants living below him in lower flats for the resulting damage due to percolation of water. I cannot believe that there is any such duty imposed upon a tenant. It is elementary law that a man cannot be expected to take precautions against damages which he cannot reasonably be expected to anticipate. I do not think that this man could reasonably have expected that anyone else would turn on this water, and certainly he could not reasonably have expected that, the water having been so turned on, it would freeze, and that, the water having frozen, the pipes would burst. Were this principle to apply, I do not think that any tenant of any flat would be safe from an action at law."

So we know now to what the tenant's liability does not extend. He need not "take precautions against dangers which he cannot reasonably anticipate." The question is what he should reasonably anticipate and guard against. So long as normal methods of plumbing provide no adequate protection against the bursting of pipes in thousands of houses all over the country during periods which are only comparatively cold, it may be assumed with some confidence that if the water system is in a proper state of repair the question whether the temperature was particularly low on certain days is of no importance, subject as follows.

SEVERE WEATHER

Sweet reasonableness or—more shortly—prudence dictates that if an occupier is leaving the premises unoccupied for, say, several days, some additional measures should be taken: if the occupier does not, previously drain the cisterns and water installation within his own premises (and such cisterns and installation serve only those premises) it would seem that here is at least a prima facie case of negligence.

In Western Engraving Co., Ltd. v. Film Laboratories, Ltd. (1936, 1 All E. R. 106), Scott, L. J., referred to the existence of "specific acts of negligence in having a leaky pipe cock or boiler." These words are a reminder that damage by the bursting of pipes after frosty weather may be caused or increased by a defect in the water installation. During cold weather it behoves us all to look not only to our moat but also to our float—the one in the cistern—and its appurtenances. As has been stated above, a water company is not liable for damage caused by unusually severe frost. But that does not mean that an occupier can escape liability if, owing to a few degrees of frost, very old pipes or cisterns, which should have been replaced long since, burst and cause damage to the property of another.

NUISANCE

Here we have arrived at the point where the line separating the torts of negligence and nuisance is difficult to find.

The keeping of water in cisterns and pipes is certainly not a nuisance if the cisterns and pipes are in good condition. The keeping of a house or other building on land is not a nuisance—provided that it is kept there.

It is undoubtedly the duty of occupiers, though not necessarily of their landlords, to abate any nuisance on the land (including buildings) occupied by them: Broder v. Saillard (2 Ch. D. 692) even if it existed when they first occupied the property (ibid). Again, an occupier who permits buildings in his occupation to become so ruinous as to collapse and fall on an adjoining property is liable in nuisance to the adjoining owner, unless his landlord has agreed to be responsible for repairs: Payne v. Rogers (2 Hy. Bl. 350) as read with Wringe v. Cohen (1939, 4 All E. R. 241, C. A.). The Wringe case goes so far as to lay down the rule that liability in nuisance exists on the part of the landlord (if he has undertaken the duty of repair) whether or not he knew or ought to have known of the dangerous state of the property; and this rule must apply with equal force to an occupier whose landlord has not undertaken to keep the property in repair.

There would seem to be no ground, upon principle, for distinguishing between repair of the structure and repair of other things upon the premises which are likely to cause damage to third parties, or their property, if not kept in repair (subject to the Rylands & Fletcher rule).—L. J.

Injury from Unfenced Machine.

In Weston v. London County Council the plaintiff claimed damages in respect of personal injuries sustained when operating a vertical spindle machine designed for cutting moulded edges on pieces of wood. At the time of the accident the plaintiff, who was 31 years of age, was receiving instruction in the work of a wood-cutting machinist at the defendant's Hackney Technical Institute. He founded his case on two grounds: First, the institute was a factory within the meaning of the Factories Act, 1937, and the defendants had failed in their statutory duty to fence the machine; and, secondly, the defendants had been negligent in failing properly to supervise his work. Wrottesley, J., found that the method which the plaintiff had adopted of pulling a piece of wood towards the cutter of the machine, instead of pushing it, was unsatisfactory and dangerous, and also contrary to the instructions which the plaintiff had received.

Technical Institutes and the Factories Act.

His lordship cited the general definition of "factory" contained in the Factories Act, 1937, and intimated that prima facie a technical institute was not within it. Nor were such institutes within certain special kinds of premises embraced by the Act. The only special case which in any way approached a technical institute was that which related to "premises in which mechanical power is used in connection with the making... of articles of metal or wood incidentally to any business carried on by way of trade or for purposes of gain. Those words did not cover a technical institute inasmuch as neither trade nor purposes of gain were involved. It was argued, however, that the present case was covered by sect. 151 (9) of the Act which provides that premises in the occupation of a public authority are not to be deemed not to be a factory "by reason only that the work carried on thereat is not carried on by way of trade or for purposes of gain." The argument was rejected. The learned judge held that the object of the sub-section was to cover all the activities by servants of public or local authorities which would not otherwise be covered by the Act. The provisions were of a purely negative kind. Schools and colleges were not factories, nor were scholars or pupils "employed" by those who owned or taught therein. It was not so much that there was no provision in the Act which was clearly applicable to any place where machines were worked on, but rather that there were many provisions in the Act which were clearly inapplicable to schools and colleges. Parliament might have used language which, in its literal meaning, included technical institutes, but the use of the words "employer", "employed," and "employment" led to a different conclusion.

The Issue of Negligence.

Did the facts disclose any neglect by the defendants to the plaintiff? in his lordship's view they did not. The degree of care which a teacher owed to his pupil must depend on the character of the latter. The plaintiff was 31 years of age and had spent his life in a wood-working machinery shop. In those circumstances it was not negligence on the part of the instructor to leave the plaintiff to adjust the machine while he himself went to look after another pupil—especially as the correct way in which to work the machine had been explained to the plaintiff. With reference to the argument that the instruction should have included teaching the plaintiff how to use the guard to the machine, his lordship indicated that he was not prepared to say that those engaged in teaching the use of an admittedly dangerous machine had to obey the code laid down in the Factories Act concerning guards. So to hold might very seriously hamper such instruction, if not stop it altogether. Judgment was accordingly given for the defendants.—L. T.

JUDICIAL MARTYRS

The resignation in a body of the members of the Norwegian Supreme Court, announced in The Times of December 24, 1940, marks the latest phase of the heroic stand taken by the Judges of Norway in the cause of freedom and justice.

In common with all other civilised countries, Norway desires justice and respects the law. Her judges have carried out their duties with independence and dignity, and their reputation stands high in the opinion of other countries. The Norwegian Constitution entrusts them with the duty of deciding upon the validity both of statutes and of administrative decrees. But the Germans are in occupation of Norway. This violation of the neutrality of a peaceful nation, though wholly unjustifiable, is nevertheless a fact which cannot be ignored. The Hague Convention of 1907, by which Germany would be bound—if she were to consider herself bound by anything but regard for her own selfish and misguided aims—has provided for such an occupation. The occupying troops must respect the laws in force in the country which they occupy, except of course insofar as they are inconsistent with such occupation.

When the Germans occupied Norway which, it will be remembered, was on the pretext of saving Norway from an invented invasion by Great Britain—a project of which no one has ever heard either before or since—the validity of this principle was expressly admitted by the German Decree of April 24, 1940, which is still in force, and declares that the existing laws of Norway shall remain in operation so far as they are reconcilable with the German occupation.

THE GERMAN AIM

Respect for their own or anyone else's pledges has never been a German vice. As the pretext for the occupation itself was a lie, so also has the German administration given the lie to their formal statement of the policy to be followed during their occupation. The Reich's Commissioner is not there merely to administer. His real object is to reduce Norway to a subordinate state, dependent in every way upon Germany, and to render all Norwegians subservient for all time to German ideas and to German interests. In pursuance of this objective he has deliberately exceeded the powers of an occupying State as recognised by international law. There is no excuse; as the Germans know from their experience of the British occupation of part of their own country that such an occupation can be carried out with due respect to the local law and to the rights of local inhabitants. Various decrees and orders have been made by the Commissioner, and so far as they are compatible with international law have been respected, albeit reluctantly, by the Supreme Court. This, however, is not enough. Norway has not yet proved as pliable as Germany demands, and further decrees have been made conferring on the puppet who masquerades as Minister of Justice in Norway the power to remove and replace at will all persons who are concerned with the administration of justice, and even setting up under the guise of a "People's Court" a rival organisation staffed by willing traitors who can be relied upon to carry out the orders of their German masters.

GERMAN JUSTICE

We in England have had our own struggles with authority, but such authority has been of like blood and allegiance as ourselves. We have no conception of the difficulties which arise from foreign domination and can form little idea of the present German notion of the judicial office which the Commissioner is endeavouring to impose on the unhappy Norwegians.

Germans by their race, contaminated as it is by servile elements, and by their unhappy history are unduly prone to submit to the will of whoever happens to be in authority. This proclivity has been made a solemn obligation since the Nazi party on a minority vote came into power as a result of an obscure and discreditable intrigue. Before then their Judges were independent in name, and sometimes in fact, and, though respect for law as such was not regarded as a duty of the government, nevertheless the standard of administration of justice was high. Since then degeneration has gone on apace. No person of legal eminence and moral standing could accept the position which a judge now has to occupy in Germany. The statute law has become a mere matter of administrative decrees, and justice at any moment may find that in Germany it is nothing more than the expression of the mere wishes of the executive. The judge may hear and determine the case, but he must be prepared to operate as the instrument of the executive, merely contriving, while preserving the appearance of a trial, to bring about a decision which has been predetermined by some unknown official of more or less importance, who is actuated by reasons having no relation to the justice of the cause, much in the way that Jezebel practised on the judges of Naboth in order that Ahab might confiscate the vineyard he coveted.

The judge has no independence. He is merely one of the members of a bureaucracy who must obey orders. Such a tendency always exists in every civil service, and it is always necessary to watch and guard against its extension, as Lord Hewart has more than once pointed out. We have successfully resisted that tendency in the past and may have to do so again. But our Constitution has recorded over and over again the principle that the rights of the people exist by law and can only be altered in accordance with law. The administration of justice demands an upright and independent judiciary. Magna Carta and the Bill of Rights—to name only two famous statutes—embody the principles that the right of access to the Courts shall be open to all, and that they shall lay their complaints before Judges who shall do right to all manner of men without fear, favour, affection, or ill-will. The Judge knows that his position is secure so long as his conduct is pure, and that no inconvenience to the government can or will justify his removal from office.

The advocate knows that the fearless discharge of his duty to his client will in no way endanger his liberty or his career, but on the contrary that it will enhance his reputation. For the lawyer is no mere journeyman doing the routine legal work of the public. He shares with the Judge the duty of maintaining the principles of justice and securing the liberty of the people. Under the present regime in Germany both judge and advocate who so act would find their reward in disciplinary treatment or a concentration camp.

RESPECT FOR LAW

Respect for law is essential to true civilisation. Without it liberty is impossible and life must be miserable, even for the tyrant who shivers in his underground retreat and hides behind his duplicates because in his heart he knows that, as neither he nor his slaves have any respect for law, neither he nor they are safe from one another. When misery overcomes the desire to live, he is doomed. Without respect for law men are but brute beasts: with it and by it we become men living in amity together because each regards the rights of his neighbour. Such a conception is foreign to the German mind, which is so obsessed with the efficacy of power that it ignores the lessons of the past. No Nazi could be the author of those eloquent words of Hooker: "Of law it can be no less acknowledged than that her seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world, all things in heaven and earth do her homage, the very least as feeling her care and the greatest as not exempt from her power."

The Norwegian judges have refused to bow the knee to Baal. They have made their stand and protest for the liberties of the people of Norway, and we salute them as the latest martyrs in the cause of liberty. When the present oppression has passed away in the inevitable defeat of the Nazi domination, they will reap their full reward. But part of it they have already. Now and for all time they have earned the respect and admiration of those who respect justice and love their fellow men.—L. J.

SEPARATION AGREEMENT AND DECREE OF NULLITY

It was decided in Bragg v. Bragg (1925) P. 20; 132 L. P. 346, and Plunkett v. Plunkett, 1937 3 All. E. R. 736, 101 J. P. 508, that a decree of divorce does not put an end to an existing order of maintenance made by court of summary jurisdiction, though it may be a ground for varying or revoking such an order. The recent case of Adams v. Adams (1941) 1 All. E. R. 334, should be noted, because of its effect on a similar but slightly different question, namely, what may be the effect of a decree of nullity of marriage upon such an order. In Adams v. Adams a husband and wife had separated under an agreement, and he had contracted to make her a weekly allowance. Subsequently he obtained a decree of nullity on the ground of his wife's incapacity to consummate the marriage, and when she sued him for arrears he contended that arrears accruing due after the date of the decree of nullity could not be recovered. The County Court judge found in favour of the wife, and the husband appealed.

The Court of Appeal confirmed the decision of the County Court judge. It was held that in a case of a decree of nullity on the ground of incapacity the marriage is not void for all purposes, but only voidable and the marriage itself is valid for certain purposes.

Goddard, L. J., distinguished the case of a marriage annulled for incapacity from that of a marriage annulled for such a cause as bigamy. "It may be pointed out, however, that, if a husband enters into a separation deed in ignorance of the fact that his marriage is void—because, for instance, the marriage was bigamous, or the parties were within the prohibited degrees of affinity, and he did not know of the impediment—the deed is void, as was decided in Law v. Harragin, following Galloway v. Galloway. These cases proceed on the ground of mistake, but there can be no mistake where a decree of nullity is obtained on the ground of incapacity after a separation, of the petitioning spouse ex hypothesi can have no greater knowledge of the facts when he or she petitions than when they separated."

A superficial view of such a case might make it appear hard on the husband, it being suggested that the decree was in effect a decision that there never had been a marriage and that consequently any obligation by the man towards the woman must at all events cease from the date when the court declared there had been no marriage. This argument was, however, disposed of by the Court of Appeal, and Scott, L. J., dealt with the question of hardship in the following statement: "I wish to dispose of any notion that a hardship must necessarily result from a decision that the decree of nullity left the appellant bound by the agreement of separation. On the decree absolute, either party could then have applied to the court to vary its terms, treating it as a post-nuptial settlement within the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 192, and even now there is no statutory bar to the appellant making an application by the leave of the judge under r. 41 (1), and, in the circumstances of the case, the judge might perhaps exercise his discretion in spite of the delay."

It seems to follow that a decree of nullity does not automatically put an end to a magistrate's order of maintenance. It would however, be a ground upon which an application might be made to the court to vary or revoke the order, and the principles laid down in Adams v. Adams, supra, would furnish guidance.

Just as the husband could apply to the High Court as was pointed out by Scott, L. J., to deal with the question of the agreement to pay a weekly allowance, so, also it is submitted the husband can apply to the court of summary jurisdiction which made the maintenance order for relief from the obligation. As there are in such a case no children to be considered, the issue between the parties would generally be simple, and the court might be justified in revoking the order for payment of maintenance upon application being made.—J. Unreliable Test.

Recently at the Durham Assizes there fell from the lips of Charles, J., some wise and witty comments on drunkenness tests: "When I read through the report of the police surgeon, with his answers and conclusions, I said to myself, 'Charles, you are always drunk yourself—always, because you could never do better than the accused did in tests like those imposed.' " "Always keep in mind," he warned a jury, "that if you cannot stand on one leg properly, you are drunk." The learned judge added that he was staggered to hear that one reason which convinced the doctor that the accused was drunk was the fact that he wrote his name with such perfection. The fundamental illogicality of most drunkenness tests lies in the fact that to say "All drunk men fail at this test" is not the same thing as saying "All men who fail at this test are drunk." Even if that were not so plain, their practical unreliability has often been demonstrated. Once, in the court of the late Sir Ernest Wild, when he was Recorder of London, a doctor stated that he had applied the Romberg test—standing still without swaying, with the feet together and the eyes shut. When the judge asked him to give a demonstration himself a distinct sway was noticeable. In another case an alleged drunken man having successfully articulated "British Constitution" and "The Leith police dismisseth us," counter-attacked by requiring the doctors to repeat the first two lines of "Jabberwocky," and they failed.

Always Drunk.

Turning again to the words of Charles, J., in these half-bottle days, it is a very reductio ad absurdum for a judge to suggest that the logical conclusion of a line of thought is that he is drunk. But it was not always so. More particularly things were different in Scotland and Ireland. Lord Newton, an exceedingly eminent Scots judge, was a heavy drinker. Once a friend, with whom he was discussing the question of purchasing an estate from which he might take his title, said: "Weel, my lord, there's the estate of Drunkie in the mercat; buy it and then ye'll no need to tak' it amiss when folk say ye're drunk aye." Judge Ball, in Ireland, used to keep one of the inkpots on his desk filled with brandy so that he could now and then take a surreptitious sip through a straw kept handy among his pens. There is a story of another Irish judge who drank so freely at a Viceregal ball that he was none too steady on his legs. "Is it true," someone asked Chief Justice Doherty next day, "that he danced at the Castle ball?" "Well," replied the Chief, "I certainly can say I saw him in a reel."—S. J.

What is a Jew ?

Most people have what they call a "pretty fair idea" of what is a Jew. This means, as usual, that the ideas which they hold are vague and unsatisfactory. Last year

Mr. Justice Morton had to consider whether a codicil which cut out of the benefits of a will any child of the testator who should marry a person "not of the Jewish Faith", was void for uncertainty. He decided that it was so. The Court could not dive into a man's mind to ascertain whether in truth he held a certain faith. Recently Mr. Justice Bennett had a similar case (In re Samuel's Will Trust (Times, April 1)). The testator was anxious that his children should not marry those who were not Jews. He made provision that they should forfeit all benefits under his will if they married anyone "who is not of Jewish parentage and of the Jewish Faith." On the second condition, that of faith, the learned Judge could, of course, do nothing but follow his learned brother, though he said some words which make readers think that these decisions might not survive an appeal. As to "Jewish parentage" it is much too vague. The phrase might refer to race or to religion. The testator did not say whether "parentage" meant of one parent or of both. Testators who wish to make wills of this kind must clearly take better advice in the future. It is interesting to speculate (if speculation were necessary) on the result of this case in German Courts.—L. J.

Seven to One

A London paper records the fact that seven Magistrates attended a petty sessional court where there was only one case to be dealt with, and the defendant did not appear. He was fined for riding a bicycle without lights.

It seems a pity that seven people, possibly busy men and women, should all attend for a single case, when two would suffice, and, according to many people, three is the ideal number. When it turns out that there is only one case to try, and that one apparently trivial, it really does seem that a good deal of time has been wasted. Presumably the justices set aside part of the day for this work and spent a little time travelling to and from the court.

When most people are busy it is good plan to have a rota under which two or three magistrates attend and one or two others are ready in reserve. That is from the point of view of the magistrates themselves. From the point of view of the businesslike handling of cases, a small bench is preferable to a large and it is difficult to find anything in favour of courts sometimes consisting of far more than seven members. We suggest three or at most five.—J. P.

AVOIDANCE OF CONTRACT

"Although it is true that the court ought not to make a contract for the parties which they have not made themselves, yet a mercantile contract, which is usually expressed shortly and leaves much to be understood, ought to be considered fairly and liberally for the purpose of carrying out the object of the parties..."

This excerpt from Lord Justice Mellish's judgment in The Teutonia (26 L. T. Rep. 48; L. R. 4 P. C. 173) may well serve as the text for the present article. The question involved, which is one of general importance to practitioners, was raised in the recent case of Hindley and Company Limited v. General Fibre Company Limited, (163 L. T. Rep. 424) and its nature may be conveniently indicated by the contentions of the parties.

By a contract dated 27th July, 1939, the appellants sold to the respondents a consignment of jute which was to be shipped from India to Hamburg, Antwerp, Rotterdam or Bremen in September or October, 1939. The buyers had an option to select any one of the four ports named and by a letter dated 11th September, 1939, nominated Bremen as the port of delivery. On 27th September in answer to a letter from the sellers to the effect that Bremen was an illegal destination—the Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939, had come into operation on 3rd September—the buyers withdrew the nomination and substituted Antwerp. The sellers treated the contract as void and the goods were never shipped. The matter came before the Appeal Committee of the Jute Association which awarded damages for breach of contract subject to the following three questions for the opinion of the court: (1) whether, when the buyers nominated Bremen, the sellers were entitled to treat the contract as having been cancelled; (2) whether, after such purported cancellation, the buyers were entitled to decline to accept cancellation and to nominate Antwerp; (3) whether the sellers were entitled to cancel, and whether the subsequent correspondence amounted to a waiver of their right to do so.

The sellers argued that up to the 11th September the contract was complete in all its terms but one—namely the port of destination—and that, once that port was declared, the contract became complete. The right to declare other ports had gone and, as the contract for discharge at Bremen was illegal and void, the contract came to an end.

The buyers argued that the effect of the war was not to render the contract as a whole illegal inasmuch as it could still be performed in a legal way. The Trading with the Enemy Act, 1939, rendered it illegal to declare Bremen or Hamburg and the duty then resting on the buyers was to declare a legal port. There was no longer any contractual right to declare either of the two above-named places and such declaration imposed no duty contractual, or otherwise, on the sellers. It was a bad declaration—a mere nullity, and the buyers were under a duty to withdraw it and submit a good one.

Mr. Justice Atkinson referred to The Teutonia (sup.) as affording a good deal of assistance in determining which was the true view. In that case the master of a Prussian vessel had on board a cargo of nitrate of soda under a charter-party and bill of lading bound for Falmouth for orders to proceed to any safe port in Great Britain or on the Continent between Havre and Hamburg, and there deliver the cargo. The ship arrived at Falmouth on 10th July, 1870, and the master received orders to go to Dunkirk and there deliver the cargo. He arrived shortly before the outbreak of the Franco-German war, but the court decided on the issue of fact that, on the information he had, the master had acted reasonably in refusing to deliver at Dunkirk and the case was treated as one in which it had become unlawful for him to deliver the cargo at the date of his arrival. In fact, he put back to the Downs, to make inquiries, was advised by the owner not to go to Dunkirk, and ultimately put into Dover. The charterer claimed the cargo, and the master declined to hand it over until he had received the freight.

The position was thus dealt with by Lord Justice Mellish. The appellants' argument assumed that the outbreak of war rendered the performance of the charter-party illegal, and that the contract between the parties was dissolved accordingly. It was true that the outbreak of war rendered it illegal for the ship to enter any French port; but the question was whether, under the terms of the charter-party, the contract might not still have been legally performed by the delivering of the cargo at some of the other ports mentioned in the charter-party. The substance of the contract was that the cargo might be delivered at any one of a number of ports, that the consignee was to have the selection of a particular port, but that he was bound to select a safe port—one at which the master could deliver the cargo and earn his freight.

Had the contract been completely performed by the naming of a port at which it turned out in the end to be impossible to deliver? The charterer would have committed a breach of contract by naming a port closed by the order of the Government of the country at the time when he named it (Ogden v. Graham, 1 B. & G. 773), and if war had broken out before the consignee gave orders for the master to proceed to Dunkirk, the consignee would have been bound to name some other port than a French port as the port of discharge. In the circumstances, it was intimated, the court ought not to treat the contract as impossible of performance. "It would seem very unjust," the learned Lord Justice said, "to hold, because the consignee has named a port at which, without any fault on the part of the shipowner, it is impossible for the cargo to be delivered, that, therefore, the consignee is entitled to the possession of the cargo at the nearest neighbouring port, which in a charter-party framed like this must necessarily be one of the ports named in the charter-party, without paying for the cargo any freight whatever."

In the result, the court held that the contract had not been dissolved by the impossibility of delivering the cargo at Dunkirk and that the shipowner had not lost his chartered freight, nor his lien for it, at the time when the cargo was demanded at Dover.

Is the position different if the port named is at the time, and does not subsequently become, as in the case just considered, an illegal destination?

This question was considered in Waugh v. Morris (28 L. T. Rep. 265; L. R. 8 Q. B. 202), where the defendant named a place for the delivery of hay which, unknown to him and to the shipowner, contravened an Order in Council made under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1869. The point it is desired to emphasise will emerge from the following quotation from the judgment of the Court of Appeal delivered by Mr. Justice Blackburn: "It was said that the intention of both parties was that the hay was to be landed, that therefore they intended to violate the law, and that it may be shown by extraneous evidence that a contract, on the face of it perfectly legal, is void because made with intent to violate the law, and that ignorance of the law makes no difference. But we think, in the first place, that it is a mistake to say that the plaintiff intended that the hay should be landed. He no doubt contemplated and expected that the hay would be landed, for, except under very unusual circumstances, hay is not brought into the Thames for any other object; but all that the shipowner bargained for, and all that he can properly be said to have intended, was that, on the arrival of the ship in London, his freight should be paid, and the hay taken out of his ship."

His Lordship went on to state that, if, unexpectedly, there had arisen a great demand for hay abroad, the consignee might have transhipped and exported it without the shipowner having the slightest ground for complaining that his intention was frustrated. "We agree," the judgment continues, "that a contract, lawful in itself, is illegal if it be entered into with the object that the law should be violated; if, as it is expressed in Pearce v. Brooks (L. R. 1 Ex. 213), it is done 'for the very object of satisfying an illegal purpose,' or, as it is expressed in McKinnell v. Robinson (3 M. & W. 434), 'for the express purpose of a violation of the law.' But in the present case the shipowner never did even contemplate or believe that the defendant would violate the law. He contemplated that the defendant would land the goods, which he thought was lawful; but if he had thought at all of the possibility of the landing being

Are criminals made or born? Modern investigations show that crime as such is not inherited. There may be predisposing conditions like lack of normal intelligence or low I.Q. Thus Burt would say that 1/5 of the criminals are dull simpletons. Again, some children inherit one or other of the instincts in excess. Thus the child whose acquisitive propensity is very strong steals money to satisfy his natural promptings. Here the delinquent act is not premeditated. The primitive impulse is obeyed without reflection. Thus the child whose intelligence is not normal or whose innate impulses are extraordinarily strong is susceptible to drift into delinquency in the absence of control and supervision.

The environmental conditions are important. The home is the "basic institutional unit in character formation." Homes broken by divorce, death, quarrels, alcoholism and parental immorality tend to vitiate the child's character. Who of the child's data an atmosphere of the child wants to and maintain himself by irregular means.

Oftentimes such children are the objects of at the hands of their mates. The child naturally develops malice against society which finds expression in crime.

Where the delinquency is due to the abnormal development of certain propensities the cure may consist in diverting these toward more approved forms of behaviour. Thus for instance a child with an excess of the acquisitive urge may be led to take interest in books and be made to turn from the acquisition of wealth to the acquisition of knowledge. And, so in other cases.

Juvenile delinquency usually ends in adult delinquency. But it is easier to cure delinquency in children. The main business of correction is to provide right direction and guidance for the delinquent child.

In order to do this it is essential to ascertain the origin of the anti-social conduct; the circumstances and incentives which contributed to delinquency.—P. R.

What Mischief Afoot.

In response to an ad declaring that a certain lawyer had money to lend, the following letter of inquiry was received.

"Dear Sir,

I saw your Ad in the Tama News Herald. I would need a little money to loan. I wonder what your plans are.

I would like to try it out once, to see if I like it and if you like it the way I would want it.

I always need a little extra money. I sure would like to try out your plan that is if you are not to strict.

I would try out only $50 and pay monthly as you wish.

I am a widow and am on the farm with three boys.

Would you be so kind and let me know your plans.

Thank you
